Introduction

This report is largely based on information provided by the Country of Origin Information (COI) department from the Austrian Federal Office for Immigration and Asylum as referred to in the Acknowledgements section. It was completed with information added by the EASO COI sector.

The report aims to provide an update on the security situation in Afghanistan, which is relevant for international protection status determination (refugee status and subsidiary protection). The terms of reference of EASO COI Reports on Afghanistan Security Situation can be found in Annex 2. It should be noted that the current update does not fully replace the December 2017 Afghanistan Security Situation report, but instead focuses on those elements that are found to be time-sensitive, while still referring to the December 2017 report for more long-term, contextual information.

Methodology

• Defining the terms of reference

For the assessment of the need for refugee protection and subsidiary protection, especially taking into account Article 15(c) of the Qualification Directive (QD), the following are key elements:

- a real risk of serious harm;
- an internal or international armed conflict;
- indiscriminate violence;
- the term civilian; and
- a serious and individual threat to life or person.

Based on various sources consulted by EASO, these key elements can be broken down into topics and/or indicators. Examples include: parties to the conflict; intensity level of the violence; nature of the violence; regional spreading of the violence; targets of the violence; risk of collateral damage; use of arms and tactics; possibility to reach areas – security of transport (roads and airports); and indirect effects of the violence/conflict.

Based upon a study of all the mentioned sources, a list of elements and indicators was drafted, which served as a basis for the terms of reference (see Annex 2). In order to make a well-informed assessment of the fear of persecution or risk of serious harm, information is needed on these security-related elements and indicators on a regional, provincial or even district level in the country of origin.

Members of the EASO COI Specialist Network on Afghanistan and UNHCR gave input on the terms of reference that were finalised by the co-authors in September 2014 taking all the inputs into account. In March 2015, EASO held a practical cooperation meeting on Afghanistan in Brussels, in which the participating EU+ countries gave feedback on the first EASO COI

(22) See annex 2.
(23) The elements, topics and indicators were identified by various sources that have a different position in the legal hierarchy and provide different levels of detail: The Qualification Directive (Recitals and articles); Case law from the Court of Justice of the EU in Luxembourg; National State Practice (National legislation; National case law; National policy and first instance decision practice); Case law from the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg; Opinions of experts, academics and specialised organisations; See the following EASO publications: EASO, Article 15(c) Qualification Directive (2011/95/EU) A judicial analysis, December 2014 [url]; The Implementation of Article 15(c) QD in EU Member States, July 2015 [url].
(24) EU+ countries are the EU Member States plus the associated countries Norway and Switzerland.
Report - Afghanistan Security Situation of January 2015. These Terms of Reference also were respected for subsequent EASO COI Reports on the Security Situation in Afghanistan.

The terms of reference were also discussed and confirmed during the EASO Pilot on Country Guidance Notes on Afghanistan (June 2016 – June 2018), for which this report is produced.

This update focuses particularly on time sensitive elements such as recent security-relevant developments, whereas for more long-term, contextual information on e.g. actors in the conflict and nature of the violence, reference is made to the EASO COI report Afghanistan Security Situation of December 2017 (25).

- Collecting information / background on key data sets used

The information in this report was collected through desk research. This report presents information on a number of indicators, starting from 1 January 2017. The following paragraphs provide background information on the nature and scope of the data sets most used in this update.

This report presents data on civilian casualties provided by UNAMA in their reports on Protection of Civilians in Armed Conflict in Afghanistan. UNAMA uses a robust methodology to verify reported incidents by corroborating and cross checking incidents, conducting on-site investigations, and consulting a broad range of credible and reliable sources. For verification of each incident involving a civilian casualty, UNAMA requires at least three different and independent sources. Unverified incidents are not included in its reporting (26). According to analysts, this stringent verification standard also means ‘there may be many more casualties than UNAMA is able to confirm’ (27). The data on civilian casualties cover the period 1 January 2017 – 31 December 2017.

For each province, this report also presents the three leading causes of civilian casualties in 2017 as reported by UNAMA.

Contrary to previous reports, this report no longer contains the same comprehensive data set on security incidents, as it currently does not have access to the source. The report does, however, present data on certain security incidents per province from 1 January 2017 until 31 March 2018. These data however are deducted from open sources and relate primarily to those incidents linked to insurgents. Given the difference in scope, comparison with data from EASO’s previous COI reports Afghanistan Security Situation therefore is not possible.

Relying on internet-based global news media reports, Global Incident Map collects security-related incidents connected to terrorism worldwide and provides a geo-referenced display of such incidents, broken down by types, on an online map. Any incident listed always comes with a reference to the source. As a rule, security-related incidents do not include criminal incidents, but incidents which Global Incident Map ascribes to or associates with insurgents, including bomb attacks (successful or attempted), targeted assassinations or assassination attempts, abductions, arson attacks, attacks with firearms, gunfights. Activities performed by state actors, such as arrests, captures, kills are also included. Double entries were removed manually.

(25) EASO COI reports are available via EASO’s website: (url).
Verification of these numbers was done using ACLED (n.d.): ACLED Data, http://www.acleddata.com/data/, retrieved 13 April 2018. Data pertaining to security-related incidents in Afghanistan after 1 January 2017.

To assess the geographic spread of the conflict, reference is made to the Conflict Severity map produced by UNOCHA (see 1.3 Conflict Severity) and to a study conducted by the BBC between 23 August and 21 November 2017. According to the BBC a ‘network of BBC reporters across Afghanistan spoke to more than 1,200 individual local sources, in every one of the country’s 399 districts, to build up a picture of all militant attacks over that period. These conversations happened either in person or by telephone and all information was checked with at least two and often as many as six other sources. In some cases BBC reporters went to local bus stations to find people travelling in from remote and inaccessible districts in order to double check the situation there’ (28).

Further, a table is presented with UNOCHA data on numbers of Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) by district of origin from 1 January 2017 to 26 March 2018, the latest available at the time of finalising the report. Both UNHCR and UNOCHA highlighted several caveats for these data. As these data are mostly collected in government controlled areas, the data exclude most of the displacement that takes place in the non-government controlled areas. Another caveat is that the reporting of IDP figures is voluntary. This means that if an NGO made an assessment which was never reported to UNOCHA, the figures will be not included. Because of the way most IDPs are identified – through the petition system – the numbers that OCHA presents are rather reflective of the number of IDPs that were displaced to mostly government controlled areas, submitted a petition about their displacement to the authorities, were screened by the authorities and then assessed by the humanitarian agencies as in need. Therefore, UNHCR considers these figures as not reflecting the overall IDP figures and UNOCHA stated that the number affected by conflict likely to be ‘considerably higher’ (29).

In an effort to counter these caveats, these IDP data are complemented with anecdotal information on IDP-movements in or from the province and its reasons. This information comes from various but mainly humanitarian sources. Some of these numbers are unconfirmed by UNOCHA, and may therefore differ from data in the table presented in the chapter. In some cases, confirmation led to lower IDP numbers, in other confirmation was impossible because of inaccessibility of the area where IDPs supposedly sought shelter.

Where deemed relevant, information coming from parties in the conflict has been added. This includes information from NATO, US Department of State or US Department of Defense (30).

- Quality control

In order to ensure that the authors respected the EASO COI Report Methodology, a review was carried out by COI specialists from the countries and organisations listed as reviewers in the Acknowledgements section. All comments made by the reviewers were taken into consideration and most of them were implemented in the final draft of this report.

Structure and use of this report

This report provides information on elements and indicators that may help in assessing the need for protection. It is not meant to be read as a whole. In the first part, a Short general description, an update is given on the number of civilian casualties and displacement in Afghanistan. Additionally, an updated version of the UNOCHA ‘Conflict Severity’ map is

(28) BBC News, Taliban threaten 70% of Afghanistan, BBC finds, 31 January 2018 (url).
(30) https://www.defense.gov/provided to highlight regional differences. These are then explained in greater detail in the second part, holding a regional description of geographic subdivisions (the 34 provinces).

The provincial parts also provide a short update of the situation as described in the December 2017 EASO COI report Afghanistan Security Situation and have the following structure:

A first subchapter describes briefly the different armed actors active in the province. These parts need to be read in conjunction with the ‘Background on the conflict and actors’ subchapters of the December 2017 EASO COI report Afghanistan Security Situation, where more details and background are provided.

A second subchapter describes the recent security trends and the impact on the civilian population. In the part on the security situation in general, information is provided on the indicators such as civilian casualties, leading causes of civilian casualties and security incidents. Both quantitative (numbers), as qualitative information (examples and description of trends), are provided. Focusing on the nature of the violence, frequency, targets, locations, and victims, descriptions of incidents within a timeframe from 1 September 2017 until 31 March 2018 are included. Where this is available, information on the further impact of the conflict on services and law and order is provided, which includes information of how the conflict hinders the delivery of services to civilians such as health care, vaccination, education and also information, where available, on parallel justice proceedings, the rule of law, and conduct by pro-government forces (not immediately related to the conflict). The timeframe for the description of these incidents is also 1 September 2017 – 31 March 2018. Finally, information is added about population displacements caused by the conflict.

Both the general and regional parts provide information from various sources on the relevant elements and indicators. Information on an indicator as such should never be taken as conclusive but as indicative for the assessment of international protection needs and is to be read together with all other indicators and information on the region (or province, district).

Provinces and districts

The provinces in this report are ranked alphabetically.

There are a number of provinces and districts for which boundaries or status are unclear. For example, it is unclear whether the district of Gizab belongs to Uruzgan or Daykundi (31). Nor is it clear whether the district of Gormach belongs to Badghis or Fayab (32). For more information, see EASO COI report Afghanistan Security Situation, December 2017 (33).

In absence of an official list of districts, EASO chooses in principal to follow the administrative divisions of the provinces used by UNOCHA, as they produce very clear maps and use the same division systematically in all their publications (34).

1. Short update of the general description of the security situation in Afghanistan

1.1 Security related incidents

In August 2017, the United Nations (UN) Secretary General changed its assessment of Afghanistan, for the first time since the fall of the Taliban regime in 2001, from a country in a situation of ‘post-conflict’ to ‘a country undergoing a conflict that shows few signs of abating’ (35). Similarly, the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Aid (UNOCHA) stated in December 2017 that ‘what was once a low intensity conflict has now escalated into a war’ (36). And following a series of high-profile attacks launched by anti-government elements in urban centres, the UN Secretary General, in February 2018, stated that the security situation was ‘highly unstable’ (37).

For 2017, the UN recorded a total of 23 744 security-related incidents in Afghanistan (38); as compared to 23 712 for 2016 (39); and 22 634 for 2015 (40).

For 2017, the International NGO Safety Organisation INSO documented 29 824 security-related incidents. In an annual comparison (see Figure 2), INSO recorded a total of 28 838 security-related incident nationwide for 2016, and 25 288 for 2015. INSO considers the following incidents as security-related: threats, attacks, exposure to direct fire, abductions, incidents involving IEDs (improvised explosive devices) and others (41).

Figure 3 shows the comparison, by month, of security-related incidents for the years 2016, 2017 and 2018 in Afghanistan (42).

Compared with the same period in 2016-2017, the UN recorded a decline of 6% in security-related incidents for the reporting period 15 December 2017 – 15 February 2018 (44).

In 2017, armed clashes continued to be the main cause (63%) of all security-related incidents, ahead of IEDs and air strikes. For 2017, a total of 14,998 armed clashes were recorded (2016: 14,977 armed clashes) (46).

Air strikes increased by 67% compared with 2016, and targeted/deliberate killings an increase of 6%. Moreover, the number of suicide attacks increased by 50%; the eastern regions counted the highest number of all incidents, ahead of the southern regions. Both regions together were affected by 55% of all security-related incidents (47).

1.2 Civilian casualties

In 2017, UNAMA recorded 10,453 civilian casualties (3,438 deaths and 7,015 injured) – this marks a 9% decrease compared to 2016 (11,434 civilian casualties, with 3,510 deaths and 7,924 injured). This was the first decline since 2012: compared with 2016, the number of civilian fatalities declined by 2%, all while the number of injured persons fell by 11%. UNAMA reported 28,291 deaths and 52,366 injured in total for the period 1 January 2009 – 31 December 2017. Anti-government groupings accounted for 65% of all civilian casualties in 2017; the main reasons were IEDs, ahead of suicide attacks and complex attacks (48).

In the first quarter of 2018, UNAMA documented 2,258 civilian casualties (763 deaths and 1,495 injured). These represent a similar level to that of the first quarter of 2017 (2,255) and 2016 (2,268) (49).

For 2017, 6,768 civilian casualties (2,303 deaths and 4,465 injured) were attributed to anti-government groups, suggesting a 3% decline compared to 7,003 civilian casualties (2,138 deaths and 4,865 injured) in the year before. This decline in the number of civilian casualties attributed to insurgent groups is due to a decline of civilian casualties by ground engagements, and IEDs. However, the number of civilian casualties from suicide attacks and complex attacks increased. The number of civilian and non-civilian casualties by targeted killings by anti-government elements is similar to that of 2016 (50). In the first quarter of 2018, however, the number of civilian casualties caused by attacks deliberately targeting civilians more than doubled compared to the first quarter in 2017, reaching 751 casualties (236 dead and 515 injured) (51).

The pro-government forces included ANSF, international troops, pro-government armed groups as well as unidentified pro-government forces. For 2017, 2,108 civilian casualties (745 deaths and 1,363 injured) were attributed to pro-government forces, which marks a 23% decline compared to 2016 (2,731 civilian casualties, 905 deaths and 1,826 injured) \(^{(52)}\). Altogether, pro-government forces accounted for 20% of all civilian casualties. The main causes (53%) were ground engagements between them and anti-government elements – resulting in 1,120 civilian casualties (274 deaths and 846 injured) - which marks a 37% decline compared to 2016 \(^{(53)}\). Air strikes were recorded as the second cause of civilian casualties attributed to pro-government forces \(^{(54)}\), accounting for 6% of all civilian casualties, a 7% increase compared to 2016. The remaining 125 casualties (67 deaths and 58 injured) were caused by situations in which civilians were mistaken for anti-government elements. Search operations resulted in 123 civilian casualties (79 deaths and 44 injured), escalations of violence led to 52 civilian casualties (18 deaths and 34 injured), and threats and intimidations resulted in 17 injured civilians \(^{(55)}\).

In the first quarter of 2018, UNAMA attributed 67% of all civilian casualties to the insurgents. The civilian casualties caused by pro-government forces decreased by 13%, while they still accounted for 18% of all civilian casualties during this period. 11% were caused by fighting and were jointly attributed \(^{(56)}\).

UNAMA acknowledged the commitment and the positive steps taken by the Afghan government to reduce the number of civilian casualties in 2017 \(^{(57)}\).

Throughout 2017, a total of 3,484 civilian casualties (823 deaths and 2,661 injured) were documented in the context of 1,845 ground engagements, a 19% decline compared to 2016 (4,300 civilian casualties, 1,072 deaths and 3,228 injured in 2,008 ground engagements). For the first time since 2012, the number of civilian casualties reported on account of armed clashes between pro-government and anti-government forces has declined \(^{(58)}\). This decline continued during the first quarter of 2018: a 15% decline compared to the first quarter of 2017 \(^{(59)}\).

In 2017, explosive remnants of war resulted in 639 civilian casualties (164 deaths and 475 injured) – a 12% decline compared to 2016. 2017 was the first year since 2009 in which a decline was recorded at all. The decline in the number of civilian casualties may be the result of less indirect fire through mortars, rockets and grenades in populated areas by pro-government forces \(^{(60)}\).

For specific information on the nature of the violence, its impact and the actors in the conflict, see EASO COI Report Afghanistan Security Situation of December 2017.

1.3 Conflict Severity

Included below is the conflict severity map, produced by UNOCHA. The conflict severity is characterised by three indicators: security incidents; civilian casualties; and conflict-induced displacement, which are representative for the period from 1 January to 31 December 2017. The shading on the map is based on an average of the ranking of all districts on these indicators.

2. Regional description of the security situation in Afghanistan

2.1 Kabul

2.1.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Kabul (City/Province)

Both the Taliban and IS carry out high-profile attacks in Kabul city (62), and the Haqqani network is also said to commit attacks in Kabul city (63).

In total in 2017, ISKP claimed responsibility for 14 suicide and complex attacks in Kabul city (64). Analyst Thomas Ruttig stated that ‘it is increasingly difficult to assess the claims and to attribute responsibility’. He added that ‘there are indications that the diverse pro-IS groups are claiming attacks that have not been carried out by them’ (65). Specifically for Kabul, both Ruttig and UNAMA suggested that some attacks may be executed by ‘terror cells’ or ‘terrorists for hire’ inside the city, on behalf of several insurgent groups (66). US officials are reported to fear overlap and convergence in enabling networks of both the Haqqani Network and the ISKP in Kabul (67).

According to independent analyst Ruttig, there has been a ‘peak of attacks’ in January 2018, although the modus operandi of the Taliban have not changed (68).

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘medium active and physical presence’ in Surobi, defined as being attacked at least three times a month, and ‘low’ activity/presence (district attacked at least once in three months) in the districts of Paghman, Farza, Qarabagh, Musayi, Khak-e Jabbar and Surobi (69).

In the period 1 January 2017 – 31 January 2018, ISKP-related incidents (acts of violence against civilians and skirmishes) were reported in sources consulted by ACLED in Kabul Province (70).

(70) ACLED, Islamic State in Afghanistan, 23 February 2018 (url).
(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Kabul city

The government is regularly conducting security operations in different parts of the capital (72). A new security plan also provides for house searches (72). In order to improve the security situation in Kabul City, at least 90 checkpoints were set up in central parts of the city under a new security plan called Zarghun Belt (the Green Belt), as announced in August 2017. The Afghan government declared a key area of the Afghan capital where important government institutions and foreign embassies along with some businesses are located as a ‘Green Zone’ (73). Although Kabul never had a formal ‘Green Zone’, over the years the centre of the Afghan capital had increasingly become a militarised zone marked by armed checkpoints and blast walls (74). Under the new plan, side roads connecting the suburbs of Kabul to the city centre will be closed off and security forces will increase their presence, identity checks as well as reconnaissance and intelligence activities (75), all in a bid to control the movement of people inside the security zone. The network of security measures also includes an increase in the number of security forces and improvements to the infrastructure around key areas of the city (76). Overall, the new security plan features 52 measures, most of which remain undisclosed (77). The ANA will also take over at least some of the once ‘porous’ police checkpoints inside the city and is training specialised soldiers to stand guard. The goal is to establish an inner as well as an outer security ring and clear everything in between (78).

2.1.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

In 2017, UNAMA documented the highest amount of civilian casualties in the country in Kabul province (including Kabul city), with 1 831 civilian victims (479 deaths and 1 352 injured). This represents an increase of 4 % compared to 2016. Most of the victims were casualties from suicide or complex attacks in Kabul city, non-suicide IEDs, and deliberate and targeted killings (79). UNHCR stated that an ‘increasing use of magnetic IEDs has led to serious concern among the population in Kabul, particularly of high profile figures [who] feared being targeted. It has also contributed to the number of civilian casualties in Kabul’ (80).

In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places most of the districts of Kabul province in the lowest two categories. Only Paghman in the west and Surubi in the east of the province are in the middle category (81). UNOCHA considered Kabul as a province where persons exhibiting high protection concerns are located, defined as ‘new IDPs, natural disaster affected people, returnees, refugees and vulnerable members of the host community’, as well as ‘non-displaced conflict affected people’. These are people living in close proximity (1 km) to explosive hazards resulting from conflict (82).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 388 incidents related to insurgents in Kabul province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (83).

Surobi district is depicted by the BBC as a district with ‘medium’ open Taliban presence, defined as being attacked at least three times a month (84). For example, in December 2017, an IED loaded on a motorcycle targeted the ALP commander and wounded ten individuals, the commander, three bodyguards and six civilians (85). In January 2018 the Afghan Ministry of Defense reported holding ground operations against the insurgents in Surobi district, killing six insurgents and wounding four (86).

According to the United Nations Department of Safety and Security (UNDSS), quoted by UNHCR, Khak- e Jabbar has the same security level as Surobi and Paghman (87).

The following incidents were reported in traditional and social media: In Chahr Asyab, the Ministry of Interior claimed having arrested a suicide bomber in October 2017 (88). In September 2017, in Qarabag district, two civilians were killed and two or three others wounded in a US drone strike on a wedding party, after some men fired some celebratory rounds into the air (89). In November 2017, one person was killed and 14 wounded, among whom three NATO soldiers (90).

Security situation in Kabul city

In 2017, Kabul province accounted for the highest number of civilian casualties in Afghanistan, which is due mainly to deliberate attacks in Kabul city; 16% of all civilian casualties in Afghanistan occurred in Kabul. Suicide attacks and complex attacks, as well as other types of incidents which also include the use of IEDs, pushed up the rate of civilian casualties in Kabul. One high-profile attack in May 2017 alone accounted for a third of all civilian casualties (81). UNAMA stated that in 2017, in Kabul city, suicide and complex attacks caused 1,612 civilian casualties (440 deaths and 1,172 injured), a 17% increase compared to 2016 (91). In January 2018, at least 174 people were killed in attacks in Kabul city alone (92).

In its map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the district of Kabul city in the second-highest category (86).

Some incidents including attacks with civilian casualties are listed below.

• In September 2017, a suicide bomber attempted to enter a cricket stadium in Kabul, where at that time hundreds of people were watching a tournament. The bomber was stopped before entering and blew himself up at the checkpoint, killing at least three people, two policemen and a civilian, and injuring at least five (95).

• In a suicide attack of a foreign military convoy in September 2017 and claimed by the Taliban, at least three civilians were injured, according to the Afghan Ministry of Interior, quoted by RFE/RL (96).

• UNAMA reported that end of September 2017, ‘a magnetic IED attached to a police vehicle providing security to a Shia mosque during Ashura, killed four civilians and injured 19, including two boys and a woman’ (97).

• A suicide bomber believed to be 12-13 years old killed at least four people and injured 13 more in an attack at the end of October 2017, claimed by ISKP (98).

• A complex attack on a TV station Shamshad TV in November 2017 (99).

• Eleven people were killed when a suicide bomber tried to enter the building where a political rally was taking place in November 2017. According to the police, quoted by RFE/RL, the victims included nine policemen, and seven wounded police officers (100). According to UNAMA, nine civilians, including one child, were killed in the attack claimed by ISKP, while 16 others were wounded. The Secretary-General’s Special Representative for Afghanistan stated that the attack, using explosive weapons in civilian populated areas, was a ‘serious violation of humanitarian law’ (101).

• Six to ten people, among them several civilians, were killed when a suicide bomber targeted an NDS compound in Kabul in December 2017, one week after militants stormed an NDS training centre in Kabul with heavy weapons. Both attacks were claimed by ISKP (102).

• In January 2018, a suicide attack, claimed by ISKP, targeting a shopkeepers’ demonstration in eastern Kabul, on Jalalabad Road, killed 13 civilians and injured an additional 19, according to UNAMA findings. UNAMA explained that 12 of the 13 victims killed were police officials ‘performing legitimate law enforcement functions of helping to restore order and safety for civilians during a violent incident’. UNAMA further clarified that ANP personnel ‘are regarded as civilians unless they are directly participating in hostilities. The officers killed in the attack were not engaged in the armed conflict’. UNAMA added that ‘the use of indiscriminate explosive devices in civilian populated areas, in circumstances almost certainly to cause immense suffering to civilians, may amount to war crimes’ (103). Tolonews reported that the death toll had risen to 20, while 30 others were wounded (104).

- Also in January, the Taliban claimed an attack at the Intercontinental Hotel in which they killed at least 22 persons (105). Human Rights Watch and the Secretary-General’s Special Representative for Afghanistan both stated the intentional killing of civilians could amount to a war crime (106).

- Later in January 2018, an ambulance laden with explosives exploded in a crowded and populated area in the centre of Kabul killing, according to initial reports, at least 95 people, and injuring 158 more (107). Afghan officials raised the number of victims to 103 killed and 235 wounded (108). The Secretary-General’s Special Representative for Afghanistan stated that the use of an ambulance and a medical emblem was a ‘clear violation of international humanitarian law’ (109). Reporting on the effect of this attack, The Guardian quoted the ambulance service saying that ‘call out have dropped 40% since the attack, as ambulances face long, invasive searches on their way to hospitals’ (110).

- In February 2018, a truck loaded with 2,000 kg explosives was seized en route to Parwan from Kabul. This demonstrates, according to UNHCR, the ability of AGEs to conduct attacks despite security measures by ANSF (111).

- End of February 2018, a suicide bomber killed three and wounded five to seven in the diplomatic area of Kabul, near the US Embassy and NATO headquarters (112).

- A former Deputy Speaker for the Upper House of Parliament and former Adviser to Afghan Chief Executive Officer Abdullah Abdullah, was gunned down in Kabul, together with his bodyguard, in Kabul in February 2018. No one claimed responsibility for this attack (113).

- In March 2018, a car bomb targeting foreign embassy vehicles killed a girl instead, and wounded 22 people more, none of them related to the target (114).

- A suicide car bomb targeting a foreign security company inside the city killed three civilians and wounded two others in March 2018 (115).

- A so-called sticky bomb or magnetic IED exploded in the vicinity of a protest tent in support of the fate of Pashtun in Pakistan, killing one person and wounding 13 more (116).

Shia Muslim civilians were deliberately attacked during the following attacks in Kabul city, almost all claimed by ISKP:

- During the preparations of Ashura commemorations in September 2017, a suicide bomber disguised as a shepherd targeted a Shia mosque in Kabul. At least five people were killed and 20 more injured, among which children, in the attack claimed by ISKP (117).

- In October 2017, in an attack claimed by ISKP, a suicide attacker lobbed a grenade into the women’s section of an Imam-e-Zaman Shi’a mosque in Kabul city and detonated his suicide vest in the second row of worshippers, according to UNAMA, killing 69 worshippers and injuring another 60, including women and children (118).

- In December 2017, a suicide bomber targeted a Shia education centre in the Hazara-dominated area of Dasht-e Barchi of Kabul, killing 41 mainly young Shia civilians and wounding 80 more (119).

- In March 2018, a suicide bomber tried to enter a commemoration of the 23rd death anniversary of Hazara leader Abdullah Mazari in Dasht-e Barchi. When intercepted by the police, he detonated his explosives, killing seven to ten persons, including policemen, and wounding 22 more (120).

- In March 2018, a suicide bomber again targeted a learning centre in Dasht-e Barchi. Wearing a suicide vest, the attacker first tried to throw a hand grenade into a class with 600 students. This grenade exploded in his hand, killing only the assailant and injuring six to eleven students (117).

- In a suicide attack near a hospital, the Kabul University and a Shiite shrine in March 2018, 29 civilians celebrating Nowroz were reportedly killed and 52 wounded. The attack was claimed by ISKP (122).

Body and vehicle-borne IEDs (VBIED) were used in complex attacks by the Taliban or ISKP against ANSF targets, such as a suicide bomber targeting military cadets as they were leaving a minibus at the gates of a military academy in Kabul in October 2017. At least 15 cadets were killed in the attack claimed by the Taliban (123). The same military academy again came under attack by five gunmen in January 2018. Eleven soldiers were reportedly killed, and 16 others wounded in the attack, this time claimed by ISKP (124).

A rocket attack on the international airport, hours after the US Secretary of Defense made a surprise visit to Kabul in September 2017, was claimed by both the Taliban and ISKP (125).

While the Taliban claimed to have targeted the military section of the airport, UNAMA stated that ‘several of the rockets struck civilian structures, [...]killing one woman and injuring two women, two men and two children’ (126). In press reports on this issue, the only civilian casualties mentioned were caused by the US air strike in return: according to quoted US and NATO sources, a malfunctioning missile struck a residential home and made several civilian casualties (127). More rocket attacks, but without casualties, targeted NATO compounds inside the Green Zone in October 2017 (128) and the Indian Embassy in January 2018 (129).

Impact of the conflict on law and order

UNOCHA considered Kabul, including Kabul city, as one of the ‘most conflict affected’ provinces (130). In 2017 and in the first months of 2018, several high-profile attacks took place in Kabul city, according to the Deutsche Welle, highlighting ‘the limitations faced by the government in Kabul in ensuring public security’ (131). In January 2018, President Ashraf Ghani was quoted saying that Kabul was ‘under siege’ and US General Nicholson said Kabul was ‘under attack’ (132). A number of press reports around the end of January/beginning of February covered the impact of a continuous string of attacks on civilians. According to psychologists interviewed by Tolonews, ‘a huge percentage of the population is extremely stressed’ (133). At the end of January 2018, the Los Angeles Times stated that ‘the attacks seem to come quicker than Afghans can recover from the one before’, reporting on residents’ anger at ‘political squabbles’ and efforts to curb corruption in the security forces that are perceived as ‘too slow’. Residents ‘feel even more vulnerable. Some Kabul residents said they were avoiding crowds and busy streets, restricting their movements and returning home before nightfall’ (134). Deutsche Welle reported ‘a state of shock’ and ‘fear and hopelessness are spreading throughout the city’ (135). Around the same time, residents interviewed by US Public Radio Station PRI stated that they want to protest the violence, but do not dare to because they fear suicide bombers will attack the demonstrations. Kabul residents also cancel their appointments and when they leave the house, they carry ‘in case I die’ notes on them (136). The Economist also reported on the anxiety of ordinary Kabul residents, who claimed to be afraid to go on the streets to protest against the government (137). The Washington Post reported on ‘a deeper sense of anxiety that things are out of control, that the government is failing to serve the public and consumed by political power struggles’ (138). Borhan Osman, Senior Analyst at the International Crisis Group, reported in an interview by The Guardian a ‘whole wave of people leaving their country, especially the young and the educated, and it’s not that much to do with actual day-to-day security dynamics – more the overall erosion of hope in the future, the [lack of] confidence about prospects of peace’. Further, he notes that chaos and despair, and distrust in the government, are actually the reason behind these high-profile attacks in Kabul (139).

Criminality in the form of gang-related violence, abductions, thefts and murder is on the rise in the city of Kabul, with some observers calling the increase in the most recent months ‘sharp’ (140). At the end on 2017, the government announced a plan to tackle crime by seizing illegal weapons and cars, and in February 2018 declared that crime had fallen by 40% in the previous month because of their measures. However, residents interviewed by Tolo News disputed these claims and stated that the government measures had little effect on the armed groups inside the city, and crime continued to rise (141).

In February 2018, UNAMA announced that a long-standing land dispute between two tribes in the Uzbin Valley of Surobi was solved due to mediation of several government officials, religious scholars and community elders and civil society (142).

According to the UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) poppy cultivation was limited to the Uzbeen Valley in Surobi, where the security situation was assessed as ‘extremely poor’. In 2017, poppy cultivation increased by 9% (143).

Displacement
UNOCHA registered, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, 353 individuals displaced from Kabul Province, of whom 343 from Surobi district, 6 from Bagrami and 4 from Guldara (144).

In December 2016, UNOCHA assessed 49 displaced persons from Surobi district and 15 from Paghman district who respectively went to Charikar district (Parwan province) and Gardez district (Paktia province) (145). In the first 6 months of 2017, 641 IDPs arrived in Bagrami, Dehsabz and Qarabagh districts from Baghlan, Laghman and Nangarhar provinces (146).

According to IOM’s Displacement Tracking Matrix, 437,693 individuals or 9% of the population of Kabul province is either an IDP or returnee from abroad. Of these, 5,425 people either live in a tent or in open air. Almost 70,000 people, or 2% of the province’s population, fled their homes in the years 2012-2017. According to IOM, 56,350 people, or 1% of its population, fled Kabul to go abroad in the years 2012-2017 (147). UNHCR has facilitated the return of over 1.3 million Afghan refugees to Kabul since 2002, and there are over 200,000 conflict-induced displaced persons in the province (148).

Situation of the displaced in Kabul city

In June 2017, UNHCR and the Norwegian refugee Council made the following assessment:

‘Kabul province has received the highest number of returnees in 2017, and historically since 2002. Its capacity to absorb and reintegrate refugees returning to Afghanistan, as well as IDPs from other provinces is minimal. IDPs and returnees are mostly settling in the outskirts of the capital (eg. PD 21, Bagrami, PD 8, PD 12, PD 16) where basic services are lacking’ (149).

In the period from 1 September 2017 to 26 March 2018, 4,296 individuals were displaced to Kabul district, primarily from Parwan, Nangarhar and Logar (150).

The total number of IDPs in Kabul is unknown. There are different categories of IDPs: those fleeing armed conflict and security problems; returnees who could not return to their place of origin and live in secondary displacement; people fleeing natural disaster; and nomads such as Kuchi and Jogi. Of the total, 40% of returnees do not or cannot return to their place of origin. IDPs in Kabul do not necessarily live separated from the other urban dwellers and often mingle with other vulnerable groups such as the urban poor, returnees and economic migrants (151). UNHCR commented that Kabul city is ‘one of the fastest growing city in Asia and is largely uncontrolled, over 70% of the city is informally built/expanded. Majority of returnees and IDPs tend to settle in the informally expanded areas mainly due to low cost of living despite the fact that basic services are not existing in those areas’ (152). They are often referred to ‘Kabul Informal Settlements’ or KIS, which include some of the poorest and most vulnerable households in the city (153). UNHCR pointed out that returnees and IDPs not necessarily all settle in KIS sites (154). In March 2018, there were an estimated 60 recognised informal settlements, housing 65,000 returnees and IDPs. The proportion of IDPs in these camps is estimated at 68%, the rest mainly being returnees. The biggest proportion of IDPs in the Kabul Informal Settlements come from Helmand. Over half of the KIS population lives from ‘unskilled daily labour without a contract’, the rest living out of humanitarian assistance, skilled daily labour without contract, or borrowing. Only 6% had a business income, and 3% were formally employed. 62% of the IDPs and 46% of the returnees in KIS were found to be ‘severely food insecure’ (155).

For example, in October 2017, large amounts of IDPs reportedly arrived in Kabul coming from Sia Gird/Ghorband district in Parwan (156) and in November 2017 another group reportedly fled military operations in Kapisa to Kabul (157). In January 2018, 500 people arrived in Kabul, in secondary displacement from three other provinces (158).

Apart from internal displacement due to the conflict in Afghanistan, Kabul city saw large flows of Afghan refugees returning from neighbouring countries. Following 1 million returnees in 2016, 2017 saw over 610,000 migrants, both documented and undocumented, returning to Afghanistan from Pakistan and Iran (159). Together with Jalalabad city, Kabul city receives large IDP and returnee populations, putting further strain on the city’s services and absorbing a large share of the humanitarian needs related to displacement and returnees (160). According to data from UNHCR, more than one in four of all returnees since 2002, or almost 1 million individuals, have settled in Kabul (161).

A study by OXFAM among returnee populations in Kabul found that most returnees depend on relatives for accommodation and other in-kind support. Those who have returned some years ago reported a deterioration of the situation for returnees in Kabul, because of increased prices, unemployment, insecurity and crime (162). Around 80% of Kabul’s population, a mix of recent and long term IDPs, returnees, economic migrants and original inhabitants, lives in informal settlements. Not only newly displaced or returnees, but also some older-generation displaced people still find it hard to integrate in the city and find stable employment, and are often cut off from humanitarian help destined for recent arrivals (163). Due to these massive and prolonged population movements, Nassim Majidi, Director of Consultancy Samuel Hall, refers to the humanitarian situation in Kabul as a ‘powderkeg, with poverty, greater risks of natural disasters, disease and social instability’ (164).

2.2 Badakhshan

2.2.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Badakhshan

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban fully control 14 districts nationwide, of which two in Badakhshan: Yamgan and Warduj. Further, they have a ‘low’ ‘active and physical presence’ (district attacked at least once in three months) in Arghanjkhwa, Shuhada, Baharak, Raghestan, Kohestan and Yaftal-e Sufla (166). In February 2018, RFE/RL reported that the Taliban control ‘large swathes of rural Badakhshan’. They have controlled Warduj and Yamgan district imposing ‘harsh rules in the two districts in the name of implementing the Islamic Shari’a law’ prohibiting TV-sets, women to go out without a male companion and requiring men to attend the mosques. Corporal punishments for transgressions deemed a ‘vice’ are also reported. Inhabitants of these two districts have fled to the district of Baharak in search of protection (167). In February 2018, the terrorism monitoring blog Long War Journal (LWJ) said that Badakhshan has become a ‘Taliban hotbed’ since 2012: Of Badakhshan’s 28 districts, LWJ assesses three to be Taliban controlled and another nine to be contested (168). Between October 2017 and February 2018, also other media reported on the Taliban’s control over...

Warduj district and surrounding areas and the district of Yamgan\(^{(169)}\), which was acknowledged by the Afghan Ministry of Defense \(^{(170)}\).

Apart from the Taliban, foreign fighters are reported in the province. These foreign fighters reportedly come from Uzbekistan, China (Uyghur Muslims) \(^{(171)}\) and Tajikistan \(^{(172)}\). The presence of IS is reported \(^{(173)}\). In addition, there are other active insurgent groupings such as the East Turkestan Islamic Movement (ETIM), which consists primarily of Chinese Uyghurs \(^{(174)}\). Analysts suggest that the presence of Chinese militants in Afghanistan is most likely exaggerated \(^{(175)}\). Local members of parliament warned in December 2017 of the increasing presence of foreign fighters, linked to the Islamic State, in the north-east of Afghanistan \(^{(176)}\).

During 2017 and also in January 2018, several Taliban fighters have joined the peace process in Badakhshan \(^{(177)}\). In March 2018, the Chinese news agency Xinhua News reported intensified Taliban activity in Badakhshan, ‘as government forces mounted pressure in winter to shrink militants’ operational abilities ahead of spring’ \(^{(178)}\).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Badakhshan

Military operations are being conducted in the province \(^{(179)}\). Air strikes are being carried out as well \(^{(180)}\), with a Taliban training camp being destroyed in the process \(^{(181)}\).

For example, in September 2017, ACLED quoted BBC Monitoring stating that the Afghan security forces launched an attack against the Taliban in Warduj district, causing heavy casualties among the Taliban \(^{(182)}\). Warduj has changed hands several times over the previous four years \(^{(183)}\). Based on several sources, ACLED reported on regular military operations, including regular air strikes, every month from September 2017 to February 2018 in the districts of Jurm, Tagab, Warduj, Baharak, Darayim, Yaftali Sufia, Kohistan, Fayzabad, Raghistan, and Argo. These reports mentioned dozens of Taliban casualties (184). In March 2018, ANSF launched a military operation to clear Jurm district of insurgents (185).

For the first time in years in Badakhshan, according to local officials, the US army conducted drone strikes against Taliban and ISKP targets in Raghistan district in October 2017, inflicting casualties among insurgents as reported by local officials (186). According to an unpublished report quoted by analysts of the Afghanistan Analysts Network, there were two US and three Afghan air force air strikes in 2017 (187). In January and February 2018, several air strikes reportedly killed dozens of foreign fighters in Badakhshan (188). The US military claimed to play a ‘leading role’ in the strikes that targeted Taliban training facilities in Badakhshan with a ‘record number’ of guided missiles (189). The targets were Taliban training camps and support networks for the East Turkestan Islamic Movement, active in China and Tajikistan (190).

During the military operation in Jurm in March 2018, Afghan officials claimed to have killed several Chinese militants (191). The presence of Chinese militants Afghanistan is said to be the main reason for increasing Chinese security presence in Badakhshan (192). There are several reports of joint Afghan-Chinese patrol inside Badakhshan (193).

Confrontations between IS and the armed forces were reported by sources consulted by ACLED in the province in the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 January 2018 (194).

2.2.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General
In 2017, UNAMA documented 61 civilian victims (21 deaths and 40 injured), a decline of 64% compared to 2016. Most of the victims were casualties from ground engagement, non-suicide IEDs, and targeted and deliberate killings (195). UNOCHA considered Badakhshan as a province of ‘high protection concern’, defined as: ‘new IDPs, natural disaster affected people, returnees, refugees and vulnerable members of the host community’, as well as ‘non-displaced conflict affected people’. These are people living in close proximity (1 km) to explosive hazards resulting from conflict (196).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 70 incidents related to insurgents in Badakhshan province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (197).

In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA placed Baharak, Jurm, Argo and Tagab districts in the middle category. All other districts were in the lowest two categories (198).

In March 2018, an ANSF military operation to clear Jurm district of insurgents allegedly resulted in civilian casualties (199). A gun battle between Taliban and ANSF during this clearing operation in Jurm district reportedly resulted in the death of four civilians and eight wounded, when ANSF responded to Taliban shootings from a residential house (200).

In September 2017, UNOCHA reported conflict with civilian casualties in the districts of Raghistan, Yaftal and Argo (201). A roadside bomb targeting the head of a local uprising force killed one woman and injured two ANP officials in Khash district in October 2017 (202). UNAMA reported the case of 100 civilians abducted in October 2017 in Badakhshan (203). In December 2017, the Police Chief of Yaftal-i Paen/Darayim district stated that the Taliban patrol the villages of the district on a daily bases, kidnapping whoever they doubt, mostly ANSF personnel (204).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

In January 2018, the Taliban desecrated the grave of a fallen soldier, exhuming the body and dragging it around behind their vehicle in Raghistan district. Dozens of residents who attended the funeral where abducted and beaten by the Taliban (205). In March 2018, the Taliban were accused of killing a woman accused of adultery in Yamgan district, beheading a young woman accused of having an ‘illegitimate relationship’ in Baharak district, and shooting a woman who refused to marry a Taliban commander (206).

In September 2017, UNAMA recorded an incident of Afghan Local Police blocking the provision of health supplies (207). In October 2017, members of the ALP from Warduj stormed the Governor’s house, injuring six people and destroying the office. They claimed both ANA and ANP did not intervene when their post was attacked by the Taliban, leaving one ALP member dead (208).

Part of the security paradigm in Badakhshan is the narcotics trade and production and illegal mining (209). In January 2018, drug labs were destroyed in Argo district during a clearing operation against the Taliban that lasted multiple days (210). Local officials claimed the provincial mines department received zero income from mining, with all revenue from mining in Badakhshan going to local powerful figures and the Taliban (211). In a cross-border incident in November 2017, two civilians were killed by Tajik border guards, who allegedly took them for smugglers (212). In a clash between smugglers and ANSF in Shahr-i Buzarg district in February 2018, four ANSF personnel were killed and six others injured (213). The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 that Badakhshan was one of the country’s major poppy cultivating provinces. In 2017, opium poppy cultivation in Badakhshan province was estimated at 6 298 hectares. Poppy cultivation occurred primarily in Argo, Darayim and Kishim districts (214). Badakhshan is rich in resources such as gold, ruby and lapis lazuli; according to Pajhwok Afghan News, armed men and militants illegally extract the province’s mines (215).

In September 2017, the national radio station Salam Watandar, created in 2003 with international support, reported a provincial education official as stating that all of the 15 schools in the district of Warduj have remained closed for two years, affecting up to 10 000 children. All teachers and other directorate of education staff fled the district and 500 pupils followed them to other areas in the province. The claims were disputed by the Taliban (216). In March 2018, these schools were still closed (217).

According to the Baharak Chief of Police, residents of Jurm and Yamgan had no access to education and healthcare because of insurgents’ presence in these districts (218). An article on the same subject suggested in February 2017 that 12 000 pupils were deprived of education in Warduj district, many of them fleeing the country or joining the Taliban for that reason (219).

UNHCR reported that pro-government militia stopped humanitarian aid to vulnerable populations in September 2017 in Warduj in response to which the insurgents in control of Warduj refused to let humanitarian aid through the district to reach Ishkashim, Shighnan, and Wakhan (220).

Displacement
UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 September 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 15 027 persons internally displaced from Badakhshan (3 967 from Jorm, 2 776 from Yaftali Sula, 2 331 from Yawan, 2 198 from Warduj, 1 953 from Khoestan, 735 from Tagab, 676 from Yamgan, 217 from Argo, 154 from Baharak, and 20 from Zebak) (221).

When the districts of Warduj and Yamgan fell to the Taliban in 2015, ‘thousands’ of inhabitants reportedly fled the districts because of school closures, the imposition of harsh punishments and the illegal taxation of the population, a displacement that continued at least until February 2018 (222).

WFP, as quoted by UNOCHA, regularly reports food insecurity among several IDP communities across the province that remain dependent on humanitarian aid from international organisations or international NGOs whose access is uncertain due to snowfall or sometimes dependent on local arrangements with insurgents and ALP (223). IDPs in Badakhshan are amongst the most vulnerable to extreme winter conditions (224).

2.3 Badghis

2.3.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Badghis
According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘medium’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) in Gormach, Bala Murghab, Muqur, Qala-i Naw, and Qadis, and ‘low’ in Jawand (district attacked at least once in three months) (225).

During the course of 2017, Taliban fighters were active in several districts, such as Bala Murghab (226), Qala-i Naw (227), Ab Kamari (228) and Qadis (229). As of March 2018, the Ghormach district, which had been at the centre of intensive fighting over the past year, was under full Taliban control (230). According to Pajhwok Afghan News, Ghormach district was entirely under Taliban control since August 2017. Pajhwok also reported that the routes to the district were blocked (231). In the previous years, the district changed hands several times between insurgents and ANSF (232). In October 2017, the New York Times quoted local officials claiming they had freed about 500 besieged ANSF personnel in Ghormach (233).

In a report from October 2017, DID Press Agency stated 180 to 200 armed men from Qadis district joined the Taliban, after mediation by community elders. The report cited local officials that claimed neglect by the local government as the reason for joining the Taliban. Qadis district is labelled as ‘insecure since 2015’ (234).

No ISKP-related incidents were reported by sources consulted by ACLED in Badghis in the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 January 2018 (235).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Badghis

Security operations conducted in the province (236) also resulted in the killing of insurgents (237) and Taliban commanders (238). These operations also entail air strikes against the insurgents (239). Clashes between the Taliban and the Afghan security and defence forces occur and are sometimes described as ‘heavy’ (240).

According to Pajhwok Afghan News, since August 2017, ANSF in Ghormach district were ‘besieged in their camp and a number of security posts’ for months. Pajhwok also reported that the routes to the district were blocked (241). In the previous years, the district changed hands several times between insurgents and ANSF (242).

2.3.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

UNAMA documented 132 civilian casualties (38 deaths and 94 injured) in 2017, a 1 % decrease compared to 2016. Ground engagements constituted the leading cause for civilian deaths and injuries, followed by targeted and deliberate killings and non-suicide IEDs (243).

UNOCHA considered Badghis as one of the ‘most conflict affected’ provinces (244). In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places Ghormach and Qadis districts in the highest category, and the districts Bala Murghab, Muqr, Ab Kamari and provincial capital Qala-i-Naw in the category below. The remaining district, Jawand, is in the middle category (245). In an assessment of November 2017, WFP assessed Bala Murghab and Jawand as ‘highly insecure’ and four other districts as ‘volatile’ (246).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 112 incidents related to insurgents in Badghis province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (247).

In September 2017, insurgents fired rocket-propelled grenades at a clinic under construction. The clinic was destroyed and there were three civilians casualties in a nearby private house (248). During an attack on a check post on the Herat-Qala-i-Naw highway, in the district of Qala-i-Naw, insurgents killed six policemen and abducted two more in September 2017 (249). Further attacks on ANSF positions occurred in Muqr and Bala Murghab in November 2017 and Ab Kamari in December 2017, resulting in several casualties among ANSF personnel (250). In February 2018, 15 members of the ANSF reportedly escaped a Taliban prison in Muqr. The men had been captured at different times over the previous year (251). In March 2018, the Taliban reportedly kidnapped five bus passengers in Qala-i-Naw. The kidnapped individuals were said to be businessmen and the reason for the kidnapping was considered by local residents to be ransom (252).

Insurgents attacked the district of Abkamari in October 2017, triggering the displacement of hundreds of families and thousands of persons, and the creation of a ‘popular uprising force’ (253).

During a failed suicide attack on an army base in a main bazaar in Qala-i-Naw in February 2018, an insurgent threw a hand grenade at the security personnel, wounding three (254).

ANSF efforts to retake the district of Ghormach from the Taliban took place in September 2017 to January 2018, resulted in civilian casualties (255). More fighting in Ghormach took place in January 2018 (256). Meanwhile, the Ghormach district Chief of Police was exposed as engaging in the practice of bacha bazi (257).
Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

In September 2017, UNOCHA reported that access to Ghormach was impeded due to security conditions (\(258\)). In September 2017, Taliban forced the closure of 25 health facilities in the districts of Ab Kamari, Bala Murghab, Jawand, Qadis and Muqur, according to UNOCHA, affecting 175 000 people. Only after several days and mediation by community elders could the clinics reopen (\(259\)). In November, humanitarian actors raised concerns about access to humanitarian help to Bala Murghab due to unspecified incidents. They pleaded for the safe passage of humanitarian convoys (\(260\)). In December 2017, UNOCHA had documented 21 incidents involving health facilities or workers in the province in 2017, the second-highest number after Nangarhar (\(261\)). UNAMA also documented the closure of 34 clinics in Badghis in 2017, the majority of which lasted for two weeks (\(262\)). Towards the end of December 2017/beginning of January 2018, another eight health facilities in Ab Kamari, Qadis and Bala Murghab were closed for up to one week, depriving around 100 000 people from access to healthcare. They reopened after negotiations by community elders (\(263\)).

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 that Badghis was, with 24 723 hectares, the third main poppy cultivating province of Afghanistan, after Helmand and Kandahar (\(264\)). Further, the Taliban are said to tax the revenues of widespread pistachio cultivation in the province (\(265\)).

Displacement

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 36 052 IDPs from Badghis (644 from Ab Kamari; 1 793 from Bala Murghab; 14 581 from Ghormach; 2 967 from Jawand; 2 459 from Muqur; 7 214 from Qadis; 2 394 from Qala-i Naw) (\(266\)).

In 2017, Badghis witnessed the third largest displacement countrywide, with 26,659 conflict-induced IDPs (\(267\)). In September 2017, UNOCHA reported that Badghis was among the three provinces reporting the highest number of displaced persons, after Kunduz and Nagarhar (\(268\)). The reasons for displacement in Badghis are reported by WFP as violence, conflicts and illegal taxation by insurgents (\(269\)).

Based on UNOCHA numbers, SIGAR concluded that as of December 2017, over 6 % of the population of Badghis was displaced due to conflict. This was nationwide the third highest percentage, after Nangarhar and Uruzgan (\(270\)).

Displacement of thousands of persons from Ghormach district, often referred to as a district of the neighbouring Faryab province, took place in September 2017 (271).

Displacement took place from the districts of Ab Kamari, Muqur, Qadis, Jawand, Bala Murghab and Qala-i Naw districts to Qala-i Naw city in October 2017 (272). For example, 200 families had to flee fighting between Taliban and a popular uprising force in October 2017 in Ab Kamari. During the attack, the Taliban was said to loot and burn the houses of those who fled the area, for presumed support for the government (273).

2.4 Baghlan

2.4.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Baghlan

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban fully control 14 districts nationwide, of which one in Baghlan: Dahan-e Ghori. Further, they have a ‘high’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least twice a week) in Burka, ‘medium’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) in Baghlan-e Jadid and Doshi, and ‘low’ (district attacked at least once in three months) in Pul-e Khumri, Nahrin, Khwajahejr, Khost Wa Fereng, Khenj and Tala Wa Barfak (274). According to an article by the Institute for War and Peace Reporting, ‘Dand-e-Shahabuddin, Burka and Baghlan-e Markazi districts all have a significant Taleban presence’ and ‘Dahana-e Ghori has been fully under Taleban control for the past two years’ (275).

Dand-e Ghori and Dand-e Shahabuddin are some of the Pashto enclaves in the province and Taliban strongholds since 2010. Because of its strategic location along the highway connecting Kabul to the north of Afghanistan, these areas not far from the provincial capital have been heavily contested for several years already (276).

In October 2017, Focus, an NGO active in the area, mentioned ‘noticeable movements’ of insurgent members in Tala Wa Barfak district (277). This was followed by ANSF operations in dispersing Taliban insurgents into the villages (278).

According to a high-ranking government official, IS presence was still weak in the north of Afghanistan in May 2017, and he had no information on any IS presence in Baghlan province (279). There were however reports in sources consulted by ACLED on acts of violence committed by IS against the civilian population in the south of Baghlan province in the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 January 2018 (280).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Baghlan

Military operations are being conducted in Baghlan (281). In the course of these military operations, insurgents (282), and in some cases also their leaders, are killed (283).

For example, military operations and clashes in Tala Wa Barfak were reported in February 2018, following a failed attempt to kidnap engineers overseeing reconstruction projects (284).

The area of Dand-e-Shahabuddin in Pul-e-Khumri district saw the launch of a military operation called Alborz 22 in January 2018 (285). The operation lasted until 13 February 2018 and included air strikes (286). The operation later reportedly went on in the Dand-e Ghori and Dahan-e Ghori areas (287).

2.4.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

In 2017, UNAMA documented 222 civilian victims (66 deaths and 156 injured), a decline of 38% compared to 2016. Most of the victims were casualties from ground engagement, unexploded ordnance or landmines and targeted and deliberate killings (288). Ground engagements caused 131 civilian casualties (33 deaths and 98 injured), also a decrease of 38% compared to 2016 (289).

UNAMA highlights that there is a link between the number of victims from explosive remnants of war and the use of indirect weapons, such as mortars, rockets and grenades. Baghlan is among provinces with a high number of incidents of detonation of explosive remnants of war causing civilian casualties, and also among the provinces with the highest use of indirect weapons (290).

In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the districts of Pul-e-Khumri and Baghlan-e Jadid (Baghlan-e Markazi) in the highest category, and Dushi and Khenjan in the category below (291).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 95 incidents related to insurgents in Baghlan province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (292).

In November 2017, humanitarian actors in the province declared the security situation to be ‘critical within Tala Wa Barfak district, Burka district and Pul-e Khumri’ (293).

Air strikes during military operations in the area of Dand-e Shahabuddin in Pul-e Khumri district destroyed a number of residential houses, sparking protest by local inhabitants (294).

In March 2018, five ALP officials from Dahan-e Ghor were killed and three others wounded in an attack on their post in Dand-e Ghor (295).

Attacks against police check posts and clashes between ANSF and Taliban have further occurred in the outskirts of the provincial capital in November, December 2017 and January 2018 (296). In the Chasm-e Shar area along the highway to Balkh, the Taliban operate mobile checkpoints, according to AAN Analyst Obaid Ali (297). The Taliban are said to control the road between Baghlan and Kunduz (298). In January 2018, attacks against police posts have also been reported in Burkah district (299).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

In Pul-e Khumri, the director of a local TV station escaped a targeted attack in October 2017. His bodyguard was killed (300). In March 2018, the Institute for War and Peace reported that all mobile phone providers were forced by the Taliban to switch off their services between 6 p.m. and 6 a.m. Residents also feared violence when apprehended by the Taliban with certain SIM cards in their mobile phones (301).

The destruction of a power pylon in Baghlan caused a ‘major power outage’ in Kabul in March 2018. The Taliban claimed to target electricity supply to Kabul to put pressure on the Afghan government to speed up welfare projects in Kunduz and Baghlan. A similar incident took place in 2017 (302).

According to protestors demanding the resignation of the district chief of police, murder, theft and land grabbing and other crimes are on the rise in the district of Nahrin (303). Over 14 000 acres of land have been usurped by powerful individuals in the province, according to local Land Authority (304). A local official was accused of land grabbing (305). Armed men linked to the Hezb-e Islami are also reported to loot and extort local businesses, some accusing them of murder, robbery, kidnapping and harassment in an atmosphere of impunity (310).

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) noted in November 2017 a 25% increase in poppy cultivation in Baghlan to 1,057 hectares in 2017. The main opium-poppy-cultivating districts were Deh Salah, Pul-e Hisar, Andrab and Khwajah Hijran (Jalgah), according to UNODC (307).

In Baghlan, coal mines are reported to be the second-most important source of income of the Taliban after drug production (308), ever since a number of mines in the province had passed under insurgent control in 2017 (309). There were reports of incidents where the Taliban set up checkpoints to collect money from coal-transporting vehicles (310).

One of the reasons cited by the governor of the province for the worsening security situation is corruption (311). In December 2017, pro-Taliban demonstrations took place in Dahna-i Ghori (312).

Displacement

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 28,763 persons displaced from Baghlan (7 from Andarab; 10,186 from Baghlan-e Jadid; 2,800 from Burka; 1,242 from Dahana-i Ghori; 35 from Dehsalal; 926 from Doshi; 21 from Nahrin; 12,719 from Pul-e Khumri; 827 from Tala Wa Barfak) (313).

In September 2017, UNOCHA reported that heavy fighting in Pul-e Khumri district resulted in 700 people being displaced to Pul-e Khumri City (314). In the following two weeks, around a thousand people were displaced per week from the Surkh Kotal area in Pul-e Khumri to Pul-e Khumri city (315). By the end of October 2017, over 3,000 people were displaced in Pul-e Khumri and Burka districts (316). In October 2017, insurgent movements and ANSF operations in Tala-wa-Barfak district triggered displacement of hundreds of families from the district to Pul-e Khumri city (317).

In November 2017, 500 conflict-related IDPs from Baghlan arrived in Panjshir and 500 more arrived in Kabul (318). In January 2018, displacement took place from Baghlan to Kapisa (319).

and due to military operations in the province, a total of nearly 10,000 people were displaced to and within the provincial capital Pul-e Khumri (120). A number of families were even displaced to Nangarhar (121).

According to IOM’s Displacement Tracking Matrix, 183,536 individuals or 17% of the population of Baghlan is either an IDP or returnee from abroad. Over 100,000 people, or 12% of the population, fled their homes in the years 2012-2017. Baghlan had also the second-highest amount of individuals fleeing abroad, 93,910 or 12% of its population (122).

2.5 Balkh

In December 2017, President Ghani announced the dismissal of Provincial Governor Mohammad Atta Noor, a political opponent of the National Unity Government (NUG) with a strong local powerbase (123). Mr Noor, who held this position for the previous 14 years, has refused to step down, causing both a rift within the country and in his own political party, Jamiaat-e Islami (124). In March 2018, this issue was solved with the resignation of Atta Noor as part of an agreement between the NUG and Jamiaat-e Islami party (125). The President appointed MP Mohammad Ishaq Rahgozar to succeed him as Province Governor (126).

2.5.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Balkh

In September 2017, Pajhwok Afghan News reported the return of Taliban insurgents to Chimtal, after a military clearing operation (127). According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘medium’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) in Chahar Bolak and Chimtal, and ‘low’ presence and activity (district attacked at least once in three months) in Dawlatabad and Sholgareh districts (128).

ISKP-related incidents were recorded in sources consulted by ACLED in the province in the period 1 January 2017 – 31 January 2018 along the border with Sar-e Pul (129). ANSF claimed to have killed 17 ISKP affiliates in Chahar Bolak district in January 2018 (130).

(Pro-)government forces and military operations in Balkh

The Afghan defence and security forces have conducted military operations (331). There are also clashes between insurgents and security forces (312).

For example, in September 2017, ACLED quoted Xinhua, stating that the military had executed military operations, including air power, killing several Taliban (333). In December 2017, ANSF claimed to have arrested 19 Taliban in Chimtal (334).

The province also houses Camp Marmal, a camp managed by the German Federal Army (TAAC-North: Train, Advise, Assist Command – North) (335), as well as Camp Shaheen (336).

2.5.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

With 129 civilian casualties (52 deaths and 77 injured) documented by UNAMA, Balkh province saw a 68 % decrease in civilian casualties in 2017 compared to 2016. Non-suicide IED explosions were the leading cause of civilian casualties in Balkh province in 2017 followed by ground engagements, and unexploded ordnances and landmines (337). For example, in one incident in Dawlatabad in December 2017, six children were killed when playing with a landmine (338).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 85 incidents related to insurgents in Balkh province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (330).

In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places Chimal district as the most affected in the province, in the second-highest category, and the district of Balkh and Dawlatabad in the medium category below (340). An IED targeting a military vehicle killed two soldiers, and wounded three others in Chimtal in September 2017, according to a report by BBC Monitoring, quoted by ACLED (341). Several more attacks on a check post in Chimtal were reported by BBC Monitoring as quoted by ACLED, in October and November 2017, each time killing several ANSF members (342).

Six policemen were killed in an ambush in an unnamed location in Balkh in October 2017 (343). A magnetic IED targeted a local ALP commander in Khulm district in November 2017, killing

Security situation in Mazar-e-Sharif

Insurgents were able to conduct several attacks in Mazar-e-Sharif: in October, gunmen on a motorcycle killed the Governor’s Spokesman in a targeted attack in Mazar-e-Sharif (346). In November 2017, a suicide bomber targeted a well-known person and tribal elder in Mazar-e-Sharif, killing the man and wounding two other (347). Later that month another man was killed in an explosion in his car in Mazar-e-Sharif (348) and in December 2017, nine civilians and two policemen were injured when a roadside bomb hit a police car (349). One civilian was killed and two more injured when a magnetic bomb hit their vehicle in the provincial capital (350).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

Several sources report on increased criminality in Mazar-e-Sharif, noting a rise in kidnappings, robberies and impunity for ‘illegal armed groups’ (351). According to local residents and officials quoted in Pajhwok Afghan News, the number of armed men is on the rise in Mazar-e-Sharif. These armed men, often linked to local powerful figures, are accused of the rise in criminality inside the city (352). Clashes over land disputed between armed gunmen linked to politicians and influential people have occurred in October (353). In December 2017, three people were killed in an armed clash between rival political groups in a dispute over a development project (354). In January 2018, another shooting between armed men linked to two members of parliament who have a land dispute, ended in at least two wounded persons in Mazar-e-Sharif (355). In December 2017, five prisoners were able to escape from prison after a gun battle with their guards (356). In January 2018, three girls were killed in crime (357) and in February 2018, a businessman transferring a large amount of money was killed and the son of another businessman was abducted (358).

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 that Balkh, poppy-free until 2015, was one of the country’s major poppy cultivating provinces. In 2017, opium poppy cultivation in Balkh province was estimated at 12,116 hectares, almost sixfold from 2016. Poppy cultivation occurred primarily in Chimtal, Chahar Bolak and Balkh districts (360).

According to UNAMA, abuses by pro-government armed groups took place in Balkh in 2017 (360). Disbandment of Illegal Armed Groups (DIAG) officials in the northern region were quoted by Pajhwok stating they had registered 500 armed groups, of which only 150 had been disarmed (361). BBC Monitoring, quoted by ACLED, reported that residents of Chimtal complained about looting by public uprising forces, under the guise of anti-terror operations (362).

In September 2017, a staff member of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) was shot and killed in Mazar-e Sharif. ICRC subsequently announced a reduction in its presence in the northern region of Afghanistan (363). ICRC’s orthopaedic centre in Mazar-e Sharif, where the shooting happened, was closed for over a month (364). UNOCHA reported that ‘the reduction of activities and footprint of the ICRC will mainly leave a gap in the emergency assistance provided to communities in rural areas, including the local and displaced population. In 2016, more than 150,000 displaced people received assistance from ICRC working together with the Afghan Red Crescent Society (ARCS) which often has access to communities in need as the only humanitarian partner’ (365). Humanitarian organisations reported difficulties accessing contested areas in the region, after the withdrawal of the ICRC and due to the complicated and deteriorating security situation (366). According to IOM, several villages in the district of Chimtal are controlled by the Taliban and remain outside government and humanitarian reach, due to regular skirmishes and abductions (367). The presence of insurgents affected the provision of health care: in Chahar Bolak, Daulatabad and parts of Chimtal district, insurgents did not allow humanitarian health teams to conduct a polio immunisation campaign (368).

Displacement

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 2,072 persons displaced from Balkh (378 from Chahar Bolak; 1,624 from Chimtal; 7 from Daulatabad; 63 from Keshendeh) (369).

In October 2017, UNOCHA reported that so far, more than 5,800 individuals were displaced to Mazar-e Sharif (370). In November 2017, the Provincial Head of Refugees and Repatriation Department was quoted saying Balkh hosted 2,500 families, since the start of the year, from neighbouring provinces Faryab, Sar-e Pul, Jawzjan and Kunduz (371).

Nahr-e Shahi district is home to the Faryabi Ha and Aman Abad settlements consisting of hundreds of IDPs from Faryab (372). Some of these IDPs have no shelter and live in tents (373).

From September 2017 to March 2018, 6 505 IDPs fled to Balkh, primarily from Faryab province (374). According to IOM’s Displacement Tracking Matrix, 181 507 individuals or 12 % of the population of Balkh is either an IDP or returnee from abroad. 13 548 people, or 1 % of the population, fled their homes in the years 2012-2017. Almost 80 000 people from Balkh, or 6 % of its population, fled abroad in the years 2012-2017 (375).

2.6 Bamyan/Bamian

2.6.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Bamyan

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘low’ ‘active and physical presence’ (district attacked at least once in three months) in Sayghan and Shibar districts (376). As the province is largely ethnically Hazara, the inhabitants are believed not to condone insurgent activities (377).

Another reason given by UNAMA is the pro-active involvement of religious scholars in peace processes at both local and central government level (378).

The Shibar District Governor blamed a formerly detained Taliban commander who recruits in Baghlan’s Dand-e Ghori and Tala Wa Barfak districts for the rise of insecurity in his district (379).

No ISKP-related incidents were reported in sources consulted by ACLED in Bamyan in the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 January 2018 (380).

(Pro-)government forces and military operations in Bamyan

Some examples of clashes between ANSF and insurgents were found, or attacks conducted against ANSF checkpoints in the province (381).

2.6.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

In 2017, UNAMA documented 4 civilian victims (4 injured), a decline of 60 % compared to 2016. The primary cause of civilian casualties in Bamyan consists of threats, intimidation and harassment, followed by unexploded ordnances and landmines, and ground engagements (382).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 10 incidents related to insurgents in Bamyan province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (383).

Pajhwok claimed they had received no reports of an attack in Bamyan for more than one year, before six people were killed in a clash between ANSF and Taliban in September 2017 (384). ACLED quoted BBC Monitoring who stated that around 80-100 Taliban attacked a police post in Shibar district in a clash that lasted 12 hours and left five Taliban and one policeman killed (385). In September and October 2017, Pajhwok reported a number of attacks on ANSF posts in Shibar district, in which two policemen were killed and two injured (386).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services
The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 that Bamyan was poppy-free in 2017 (387).

Displacement
No conflict-induced displacement was documented by UNOCHA in the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018 (388).

2.7 Daykundi / Daikundi / Day Kundi
2.7.1 Actors in the conflict
Insurgent groups in Daykundi
According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban only have a ‘low’ ‘active and physical presence’ (district attacked at least once in three months) in Gizab district (389). As the province is largely ethnically, Hazara, the inhabitants are believed not to condone insurgent activities (390). The district of Gizab however is mixed Pashtun-Hazara (391).

No ISKP-related incidents were reported in open sources consulted by ACLED in Daykundi in the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 January 2018 (392).

Government forces and military operations in Daykundi

In March 2017, 31 insurgents were killed by the ANSF in Daykundi \((393)\). Late in December 2017, one source described Daykundi as a calm province \((394)\).

2.7.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

According to UNAMA there were 43 civilian casualties in Daykundi in 2017: 16 persons were killed and 27 injured due mainly to unexploded ordnances and landmines, followed by ground engagements and targeted and deliberate killings. This marks a 59% decrease as compared to 2016 \((395)\). Pajhwok Afghan News stated they had not received any report of casualties in Daykundi in 2017 \((396)\). It must be added that Pajhwok places Gizab district in Uruzgan \((397)\).

In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places Gizab district as the most affected in the province, in the second-highest category \((398)\).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 2 incidents related to insurgents in Daykundi province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website \((399)\).

ACLED quoted Pajhwok Afghan News reporting on the killing of two civilians by suspected Taliban, and injuring a third in Gizab district, in October 2017 \((400)\). In November 2017, the Taliban was said to have tried to overrun the Gizab district \((401)\).

In a Taliban attack on military checkpoints in Kajran District in January 2018, one Afghan soldier was killed and another wounded, according to BBC Monitoring, as quoted by ACLED \((402)\).

Impact of the conflict on law and order

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 that in Daykundi, Gizab district excluded, poppy cultivation increased by more than 300% compared to 2016 \((403)\).

Displacement

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 567 displaced persons from Daykundi (529 from Gizab/Patoo; 31 from Kajran; 7 from Miramor) \((404)\).
In September, there were reports of growing numbers of Afghan internally displaced persons (IDPs) seeking refuge in Daykundi. In mid-January 2017, approximately 1,000 people were reportedly displaced from Gizab district due to insecurity and arrived in Nili district.

2.8 Farah

2.8.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Farah

Insurgents are active in several districts, such as Bala Buluk, Bakwa, Pusht Rod and Anar Dara. In 2017, the Taliban focused on the province capital, Farah City, even invading the capital in January 2018.

In December 2017, the Herat Shadow-Deputy Governor and the leader of Taliban ‘special forces’ Red Brigade in Khak-e Safed was reportedly killed in an airstrike.

Farah was one of the provinces where the Taliban launched large-scale attacks to capture district administrative centres, temporarily overrunning Shib Koh. In January 2018, the Taliban started a campaign to take over the entire province. According to scholar and expert on Afghanistan Antonio Giustozzi, military success in Farah is an early aim in the Taliban traditional ‘spring offensive’ in 2018. In March 2018, Farah was considered ‘on the verge of collapse’ by local senators.

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘high’ active and physical presence (districts attacked at least twice a week) in almost all districts of the province, with attacks at least twice a week. Only in Farah district, their presence is assessed as ‘medium’ (districts attacked at least three times a month), and in Pur Chaman their presence is assessed as ‘low’ (district attacked at least once in three months).

No ISKP-related incidents were reported open sources consulted by ACLED in Farah in the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 January 2018.
Government forces and military operations in Farah

Military operations are being conducted in the province (416), sometimes taking the form of air strikes (417), involving the killing of insurgents (418). Taliban commanders were also killed in the course of operations and air strikes (419). Violent clashes occurred between the Taliban and the security forces (420).

For example, in March 2018, hundreds of Taliban attacked the district centre of Anar Dara, and managed to capture it briefly, before being pushed out by an Afghan military air and ground operation resulting in heavy fighting that left dozens of dead on both sides (421).

A multi-day military operation, including air strikes, took place in September 2017 in Bala Buluk (422); and in December 2017 (423). Several air strikes in December 2017 allegedly killed dozens of Taliban (424).

Since mid-July 2017, Italian and US troops have been stationed in Farah province with a view to assisting the Afghan security forces within the framework of the Resolute Support NATO mission (425). In future, the Italian soldiers are expected to provide support to the Afghan forces in the districts of Bala Buluk, Bakwa and Pusht Rod, where the number of attacks on Afghan army and police bases has been on the rise (426).

2.8.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

In 2017 UNAMA documented 338 civilian victims (156 deaths and 182 injured). This represents an increase of 29% compared to 2016, contrary to the national trends in 2017.

Most of them are victims from ground engagement, targeted or deliberate killings and aerial attacks (427). Farah was one of the provinces where the number of civilian casualties of ground engagements rose ‘most notably’, predominantly due to increased presence of insurgents and the intensification of fighting compared to 2016. Ground engagements caused 157 civilian casualties (53 deaths and 104 injured), a 107% increase compared to 2016 (428). Aerial operations caused 46 civilian casualties (11 deaths and 35 injured) (429).

According to the Long War Journal, the security situation in Farah province has worsened since the end of 2016 (430).

In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the districts of Farah and Bala Buluk in the highest category, and several other districts, such as Khaki Safed, Pusht Rod and Qala Kah, in the category below (431). UNOCHA considered Farah as a province of ‘high protection concern’, defined as: ‘new IDPs, natural disaster affected people, returnees, refugees and vulnerable members of the host community’, as well as ‘non-displaced conflict affected people’. These are people living in close proximity (1 km) to explosive hazards resulting from conflict (432).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 129 incidents related to insurgents in Farah province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (433).

Examples of civilian casualties include the following: in a force protection incident, ANSF opened fire on a civilian bus after it did not stop at a police check post, injuring six civilians (434). During an attack on a police check post in Pusht Rod, mortars hit houses in the vicinity, killing a civilian and burning several grocery stores (435); in November 2017, a rocket hit a civilian home, killing three members of one family (436), a mother and two children (437); in December 2017 two women were killed and three others wounded by a mortar that struck their house in Bala Buluk (438) and also in December 2017, a six-year-old, a fifteen-year-old and an older man were killed in crossfire in Pusht Rod district, that injured another man (439). More clashes at check posts erupted in January and February 2018 in Bala Buluk, Farah City and Anar Dara (446). In January 2018, the police killed a student at a check post, after a verbal clash. In subsequent violent protests over the incident, at least two more were injured (441).

In September 2017, a multi-day military operation in Bala Buluk, including air strikes, allegedly caused civilian casualties, killing of livestock and destruction of residences and the displacement of whole communities (442).

In September 2017, in a number of cases, insurgents attacked ANSF positions and check posts along the roads, ending prolonged firefight with dozens casualties on either or both sides in the districts of Bala Buluk, Pusht Rod and Farah city (443); in October, in Pusht Rod, and Bala Buluk (444); in November, in the districts of Bala Buluk and Farah city and the Regi area (445); and in February and March 2018, in Bala Buluk in February 2018 (446).

In 2017, Pajhwok Afghan News counted 100 targeted attacks, roadside bombing and magnetic bomb explosions in Farah (447). The use of IEDs was illustrated in September 2017 with a roadside bomb attack on a vehicle of the border police, near the border with Iran (448); an IED in a rickshaw killed a civilian and a landmine two Taliban in October (449); Again several Taliban were killed in an explosion of their own IED in December in Shib Koh in December 2017 and in Anar Dara in February 2018 (450); also in February, several football players were killed when their vehicle struck a roadside bomb in Anar Dara district and that same month three civilians including a woman were killed in a similar incident in Shib Koh district (451).

Examples of targeted killings include NDS officials in September and November (452) - a former NDS officer and a policeman in November 2017 – in both attacks civilians in the vicinity were also killed (453); civilians were also killed in the firefight that erupted after a roadside bomb failed to kill its target, the Pusht Rod Chief of Police (454); a police officer in Farah city and a prosecutor of Pusht Rod district were killed in February 2018 (455).

The Taliban closed the Farah-Herat highway in the vicinity of Farah city and in Bala Buluk on several occasions in January 2018 and kidnapped several passengers from their vehicles (456).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

As the Taliban approached the city and security forces were absorbed by the fighting, residents reported a rise in crime, such as armed carjackings, thefts, robberies and killings in Farah City in early 2018 (457). Following a public protest against growing insecurity, the Governor of Farah resigned in February 2018, quoting ‘the presence of mafia and the need for public unity’ as the main reasons behind his decision (458). Meanwhile, the Taliban executed three kidnappers in Khak-i Safed in March 2018 (459). In Purchaman district, residents accused one family, occupying most of the senior government positions in the district, of abuse of power by conducting killings, forced marriages, illegal taxations, and several other crimes (460).

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 that Farah was one of the ‘main poppy cultivating provinces of Afghanistan’. The 12,846 hectares were cultivated with poppy, an increase of 41% compared to 2016. The main opium-poppy-cultivating districts in Farah were Bala Buluk, Bakwah, Khak-e Safed, Pusht Rod and Gulistan where, UNOCHA stated, ‘security was very poor’ (461).

In September 2017, UNOCHA reported limited humanitarian capacities outside the provincial capital, with only two actors present outside the capital: one working in mine action and the other implementing health services (462). According to UNOCHA, ‘conflict has an equally debilitating impact on the ability of children to obtain the healthcare they need or nutrients they require to reach their full potential’. The conflict in Farah hinders 50% of children to complete all immunisation vaccination rounds (463). In November 2017, it was reported that ‘repetitive attacks’ on transports for the World Food Program (WFP) had hampered the delivery of food to affected communities (464). In February 2018, WFP truckers refused to transport humanitarian shipments to Farah and access through air service was also suspended due to artillery shelling of the Farah airport (465). UNOCHA recorded 10 incidents against aid workers, assets, activities and related to humanitarian access in Farah in 2017 (466). Citing reasons of ‘effectiveness, cost efficiencies and security considerations’, UNAMA closed its Farah provincial office, but opened again in January 2018 (467).

Displacement

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 18 400 persons displaced from Farah (393 from Anardara; 90 from Bakwa; 8 650 from Bala Buluk; 3 966 from Farah; 265 from Gulistan; 605 from Khak-e Safed; 20 from Lash-e Juwayn; 103 from Purchaman; 3 576 from Pusht Rod; 681 from Qala-e Kah; 51 from Shib Koh) (468).

In January 2018, more than 7 000 families fled fighting in the rural areas of Farah to Farah city, where they worried about the advancements of the Taliban towards the city (469). These IDPs demonstrated against the violence end of January 2018, claiming the Taliban were overrunning security checkpoints and killing ANSF personnel on a daily basis. They claimed that the province was on the verge of falling into Taliban hands. A former governor was quoted saying that the Taliban were ‘trying hard to turn the province into a hub and a supply corridor in the southwestern part of the country’ (470).

According to IOM’s Displacement Tracking Matrix, 138,890 individuals or more than one in five inhabitants of Farah is either an IDP or returnee from abroad. 196,643 people, or 38 % of the population, fled their homes in the years 2012-2017. Over 80,000 people from Farah, or 16 % of its population, fled abroad in the years 2012-2017 (471).

2.9 Faryab

2.9.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Faryab

The Taliban are active in parts of Faryab province (472), mostly in the district capitals and in villages in the vicinity of these cities in the districts of Shirin Tagab, Khwaja Sabz Posh, Dawlatabad, Pashtun Kot, Almar, Qaysar, Bilcheragh, Kohestan, and Garziwan. The remaining districts Andkhoy, Khan-e Char Bagh, Qurghan and Qaramqol are considered to be ‘relatively calm and Taliban activities limited to far-flung areas’, while fighting continues around the province capital (473). The largest presence of Taliban fighters can be found in Pashtunkot district, which houses a hydro-electric dam which supplies, among others, the capital Maymana with drinking water (474).

According to a BBC study of January 2018 based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘high’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least twice a week) in Almar district and ‘medium’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) and ‘low’ (district attacked at least once in three months) most of the province, except for Maymana, Khan-e Char Bagh and Andkhoy districts (475).

According to security analyst Deedee Derksen, several Junbesh commanders have switched sides to the Taliban since Junbesh leader Dostum, indicted for alleged sexual assault to a political opponent, fled the country to Turkey in May 2017. During her research, she came across examples in five districts of Faryab, citing only Qaysar and Kohestan as examples (476). In March 2018, a local uprising commander, linked to rivalling Jamiaat party, joined the Taliban with hundreds of his men in Garziwan district (477).

In November 2017, the Afghan secret service presumed that Islamic State was active in nine provinces, Faryab among them (478). In April 2017, IS claimed to have supporters in Faryab province (479). ISKP-related incidents were reported in sources consulted by ACLED in Faryab in the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 January 2018 (480). There were reports of ISKP militants from Jawzjan presence in Bilcherag district of Faryab in December 2017 (481) and clashes between Taliban and ISKP in January 2018 (482).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Faryab

Military operations are regularly being conducted in the province (483), sometimes taking the form of air strikes (484). These operations involved the killing of Taliban insurgents (485) and in some cases of their commanders as well (486). Fighting between Afghan security forces and the Taliban occurs (487). In March 2018, NATO announced the intention to station dozens of soldiers in the province (488). In the future, 300 US soldiers are to be stationed in the province (489).

With heavy fighting around the capital, ANSF supported by international military forces, are trying hard to prevent the city from falling into Taliban hands. Obaid Ali and Thoma Ruttig called the province in March 2018 ‘one of the major frontlines’ (490).

2.9.2 Recent security trends and impact on civilians

General

In 2017, UNAMA documented 639 civilian victims (182 deaths and 457 injured). This represents an increase of 7% compared to 2016, contrary to the national trends in 2017. Most of the victims were casualties from ground engagement, non-suicide IEDs and targeted or deliberate killings (491). Faryab was one of the provinces where UNAMA recorded a ‘significant increase’ in the number of civilian casualties of ground engagements compared to 2016. Ground engagements caused 393 civilian casualties (84 deaths and 309 injured), a 27% increase compared to 2016 (492). Faryab province experienced the highest number of aerial operations by the Afghan Air Force that caused civilian casualties: UNAMA recorded 12 incidents that resulted in 36 civilian casualties (nine deaths and 27 injured) (493).

In 2017, UNAMA recorded 49 civilian casualties (15 deaths and 34 injured) from pro-Government armed groups, the highest number of all provinces recorded by UNAMA. For example: UNAMA recorded an incident jointly attributed to ANP, AN COP and a pro-Government armed group in Faryab, resulting in the death of seven civilians while they fled from a place where Taliban had recently fought with them (494).

UNOCHA considered Faryab as one of the ‘most conflict affected’ provinces (495). In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the majority of the province in the highest category. Of the 14 districts, only the four northernmost districts - Qaramqol, Qorghgan, Khan-e Char Bagh and Andkhoy - are not in the highest two categories of conflict severity (496). UNOCHA considered Faryab as a province of ‘very high protection concern’, defined as: ‘new IDPs, natural disaster affected people, returnees, refugees and vulnerable members of the host community’, as well as ‘non-displaced conflict affected people’. These are people living in close proximity (1 km) to explosive hazards resulting from conflict (497).

UNAMA highlights that there is a link between the number of victims from explosive remnants of war, and the use of indirect weapons, such as mortars, rockets and grenades. Faryab is among provinces with a high number of incidents of detonation of explosive remnants of war causing civilian casualties, and also among the provinces with the highest use of indirect weapons (498). For example, three children were killed and one more was wounded in Khwaja Sabz Posh district in March 2018, according to the source, due to a mortar impacting a residential area or because they were playing with an unexploded mortar (499).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 147 incidents related to insurgents in Faryab province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (500).

Examples of incidents with civilian casualties include 4 to 5 civilians killed when a mortar landed on a market in on the bazaar in the Khwaja Sabz Posh district in January 2018. Over 40 people, including women and children, were also wounded (501). Later in January 2018, several civilians were killed and injured in an air strike in Khwaja Sabz Posh, although the accounts are mixed (502). A mortar impacting a house in Pashtun Kot district killed three women and a man (503). And two people, including a child, were killed and five others wounded in a Taliban ambush in Garziwan district in March (504). When the Taliban stormed several checkpoints in Bilcheragh district in March, there were also reports of civilian casualties (505).

Some examples of incidents of targeting and intimidation of civilians and of members of the pro-government forces, including former members, and their family, are: The Taliban killed a former member of a pro-government militia and his wife, even after they dislocated, and abducted the children of two pro-government militia commanders, in order to force them to withdraw and stop fighting (506). In October 2017, three religious scholars were killed in Qaysar district, reportedly over their ‘opinion on religious issues and beliefs’ (507). In January 2018, the Taliban shot a shopkeeper on allegations of connections to the government in Shirin Tagab (508). In February and March 2018, local press reports stated that the Taliban have been in control of 50 km of the road between Maymana and Mazar-e Sharif in the districts of Dawlatabad and Shirin Tagab, running a checkpoint to search vehicles for government employees. Despite several clearing operations by the ANSF, they remained in control of that road for the previous seven months (509). Local residents reported that in the beginning of March 2018 the Taliban ‘continue to stop, search and even kill passengers travelling on the

In February 2018, several members of uprising forces were killed and wounded in Khwaja Sabz Posh, Pashtun Kot and Almar districts (512). In March 2018, a police commander was killed by a sniper in Shirin Tagab district (513).

Further impact of the conflict on services and law and order

In a case of corporal punishment in parallel justice procedures by the Taliban, a boy and a girl from Kohistan district received a public lashing in February 2018 (514).

In February 2018, armed men linked to Vice-President Dostum were accused of surrounding the airport in Maymana, in an attempt to capture a member of parliament (515).

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 that Faryab lost its poppy-free status in 2013. Since then the province area under opium poppy cultivation continuously expanded. In 2017, opium poppy cultivation in Faryab province was estimated at 22,797 hectares. This includes the cultivation in Ghormach district, according to UNODC ‘a major opium poppy cultivating district’ (516).

According to a study conducted by SIGAR, more than seventeen schools in the province were open and in an operational state in the period from May to September 2017. Problems cited included absence of teachers and structural deficits (517).

UNOCHA reported that Faryab is one of the provinces with the highest number of trauma cases due to conflict seen by the health facilities in the province. Yet in 2017, Faryab was one of these places where health facilities were forced to close (518). Faryab was one of the provinces affected by the withdrawal of ICRC’s activities in northern Afghanistan, following a number of incidents targeting ICRC personnel (519).

Due to continuous conflict, humanitarian actors could not travel to several districts in Faryab province or on the highway connecting the province with neighbouring Jawzjan in October 2017 (520). In November 2017, UNOCHA reported that members of an armed group and local people temporarily blocked the Andkhoy-Maymana highway, adding that ‘insecurity along the highway remains a major challenge for humanitarian partners working in the area’ (521). This situation was still ongoing in January 2018, when UNOCHA reported that ‘fighting over control of the highway connecting Maymana with Andkhoy has disrupted the flow of aid supplies from Mazar-e Sharif to Maymana since last November’, adding that the aid delivery to 3,000 families in Maymana had to be postponed (522). In February 2018 UNOCHA noted that ‘insecurity along the Andkhoy-Maymana highway, Faryab Province, persists’ (523).

Also secondary roads into the districts were frequently considered ‘unsafe’: In September 2017, humanitarian actors found the security along the road from Maymana to Garziwan, Kohestan, Khwaja Sabz Posh, Shirin Tagab, Bilcheragh and Ghormach ‘not safe’ (524). In October 2017, the access to Khwaja Sabz Posh, Shirin Tagab, Dawlatabad, Kohestan, Garziwan and Bilcheragh was considered ‘challenging’, with humanitarian agencies unable to travel to these districts to implement the humanitarian activities or assess the needs of IDPs (525).

Insecurity on the roads hindered farmers and traders reaching markets or importing food supplies in Khwaja Sabz Posh and Shirin Tagab districts increasing food prices and reducing food security. Insecurity equally limited access to healthcare and education (526).

Displacement

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 47,839 persons displaced from Faryab (5 749 from Almar; 7 from Andkhoy; 4 803 from Bilcheragh; 5 355 Dawlatabad; 553 from Garziwan; 6 906 from Khwaja Sabz Posh; 3 204 from Kohestan; 45 from Maymana; 10 597 from Pashtun Kot; 7 from Qaramqol; 3 678 from Qaysar; 6 935 from Shirin Tagab) (527).

In September 2017, some 1,700 people were reportedly displaced from Pashtun Kot to Maymana City (528) and displacement also took place from Bandar, a cluster of 75 villages in Kohestan district, following significant clashes between ANSF and insurgent groups (529). A further 273 families were assessed as IDPs by humanitarian actors in Qaysar district (530).

In October and November 2017, UNOCHA mentions displacement from Faryab to Balkh, Sar-e Pul and Jawzjan (531). Humanitarian agencies recorded 1,382 IDP families in Maymana city and 101 families in Qaysar district (532). In February 2018, UNOCHA recorded another 567 individuals displaced from or within Faryab (533). Thousands of displaced people from Faryab amongst other places reportedly suffered from harsh winter conditions and complained about the lack of help in Jawzjan (534).

According to SIGAR, 3.16 % of Faryab’s population consists of internally displaced persons (535).

2.10 Ghazni

2.10.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Ghazni
Both the Haqqani network and the Taliban are active in some regions of the province (536).

The Taliban were able to gain influence in Ghazni after 2001, like in many other regions in southern Afghanistan with a Pashtun majority (537).

According to a BBC study of January 2018 based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban fully control 14 districts nationwide, including the district of Nawa in Ghazni. Further, they have a ‘high’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least twice a week) in Rashidan, Jaghatu, Khwaja Umari, Zanakhan, Ghazni, Dehyak, and Andar. The rest of the province saw ‘medium’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) or ‘low’ Taliban presence (district attacked at least once in three months) except for Malestan and Jaghori districts (538).

The Afghan Ministry of Interior Affairs refuted the presence of IS in Ghazni province (539). However, ISKP-related incidents were reported in sources consulted by ACLED in the province in the period 1 January 2017 – 31 January 2018, especially along the border with Paktika (540).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Ghazni
Military operations were being conducted in Ghazni province (541); insurgents were killed and arrested (542). Air strikes took place as well (543), with Taliban being killed in the process (544). The province is seeing armed clashes between security forces and insurgents (545).

The strict rule imposed by the Taliban – closing of schools, stop of construction projects, etc. – has led to counter-reactions. The inhabitants of a village in Andar district organised their own militia, a ‘popular uprising movement’ to fight back the insurgents in 2012; other districts in Ghazni followed suit. According to the militiamen the security situation improved as a consequence; schools and health clinics were reopened according to the members of this militia. These militias were later incorporated in the ALP program. As they originate from the local communities, people tend to trust them. Nevertheless, there have been instances of corruption and abuse also within these militias through illegal checkpoints (546).

2.10.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

In 2017 UNAMA documented 353 civilian victims (139 deaths and 214 injured). This represents a decrease of 11% compared to 2016. Most of the victims were casualties from ground engagement, non-suicide IEDs or targeted or deliberate killings (547). Ghazni is among the provinces with a high number of incidents of detonation of explosive remnants of war causing civilian casualties, and also among the provinces with the highest use of indirect weapons. This highlights, according to UNAMA, the link between the number of victims from explosive remnants of war, and the use of indirect weapons, such as mortars, rockets and grenades (548). Ghazni is one of the provinces where ALP were accused of causing civilian casualties in 2017 (549).

In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the Andar district in the highest category. Most of the districts along the Kabul-Kandahar highway, Dehyak, Ghazni district, Waghaz, Qarabagh, Giro, Muqur and Gelan, and the western district of Ajrestan were in the highest two categories of conflict severity. The western districts Jaghori, Malestan and Nawur are in the lowest category (550). UNOCHA considered Ghazni as one of the 'most conflict affected' provinces (551).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 149 incidents related to insurgents in Ghazni province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (552). Incidents with civilian casualties include an air strike in Deh Yak district in September 2017, targeting Taliban fighters. Local residents claimed four civilians were also killed in the incident (553); a roadside bomb killed two civilians and injured three more in Qarabagh district in December 2017 (554); during a military operation in January 2018, a rocket impacted a civilian home and killed eight persons, of whom six or seven children, and wounding three more in Qarabagh district (555).

In October 2017, a complex attack targeting the premises of the District Governor and police headquarters in Andar district happened (556). The attack, which lasted, according to one source, nine hours, claimed the lives of 15 to 25 policemen and five civilians, while injuring 15 to 55 others (557). According to Thomas Ruttig, the attack lasted for three days, and the Taliban were briefly capable of taking over the district centre, before being driven out by ANSF supported by US air strikes. Besides the five civilians killed, at least 28 security personnel were killed and 18 others wounded, according to Thomas Ruttig (558). In an ambush on ANSF reinforcements, seven were killed (559).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

In January 2018, six policemen were arrested for their involvement in kidnapping, murder and armed robbery, while they were supposed to provide security on the main highway in Ghazni (560).

In January 2018, The Taliban interfered in a long standing and violent dispute between Pashtun and Hazara communities over land and water in Qarabagh. After Pashtun was killed, the Taliban kidnapped 11 Hazara and closed off the road to a Hazara village (561). The conflict further escalated in March 2018, when three members of a family, including a woman and child, were killed and two other abducted (562). The two abducted were later released, in exchange for eight persons detained by the Taliban (563). Local officials stated that these ethnic clashes had resulted in the death of dozens of people while 14 had been abducted (564). Residents of Qarabagh district closed the highway connecting Kabul and Kandahar for several days, protesting the violence. This protest was violently broken up by the security forces, wounding several protesters (565). The Taliban is said to widely collect taxes from media outlets, businessmen and ordinary citizens in Ghazni (566).

In 2017, Ghazni lost its status of poppy-free province, for the first time in more than two decades, since 1995. Poppy is being cultivated again, on 1,027 hectares, as at November 2017. Opium poppy was mainly cultivated in Ajrestan district where the security situation was assessed by the UN Office on Drugs and Crime as ‘extremely poor’ (567).

In January 2018, Pajhwok reported that remote areas in Ghazni had no female health care workers; they are only working in Malistan, Jaghatu, Khwaja Omari and Jaghori districts.

Patients had trouble reaching female doctors because the security on the roads hindered transporting patients to health care centres in other districts (568).

In March 2018, local officials claimed three shrines had been attacked or blown up in two months’ time in the province of Ghazni (569).

Displacement
UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 September 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 1,747 persons displaced from Ghazni (35 from Ajrestan; 504 from Andar; 60 from Dehyak; 56 from Ghazni; 28 from Khwaja Umar; 14 from Malestan; 210 from Muqur; 56 from Nawa; 7 from Nawur; 259 from Qarabagh; 308 from Waghaz; 210 from Walimuhammad-e Shahid) (570).

In October 2017, more than 1,800 displaced people reportedly arrived in Ghazni centre, nearly 700 people arrived in Malestan, primarily displaced from within the province and from neighbouring Uruzgan (571).

In November 2017, pro-government forces conducted operations to recapture Andar district of Ghazni, displacing 160 families to neighbouring villages. UNHCR reported that these IDPs did not return to their places of origin out of fear for further insurgent attacks (572). In the second week of December 2017, UNOCHA indeed reported that ‘fierce armed clashes in Andar district’, reportedly displaced around 3,500 people within the district and 2,800 to Ghazni centre (573).

Armed clashes reportedly further displaced 2,450 individuals in Andar district during the third week of December 2017 (574).

In February 2018, UNOCHA reported in Ghazni, nearly 3,400 people arriving in Ghazni city from several districts, due to military operations, intimidation and forced taxation by insurgents (575).

2.11 Ghor/Ghowr

2.11.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Ghor
According to a BBC study of January 2018 based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘medium’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) in Chaghcharan, Shahrak, Du Layna, and Pasaband, and a ‘low’ presence (district attacked at least once in three months) in Tulak, Saghar, and Taywara. No presence or activity reported by the BBC only in the eastern districts Dawlat Yar and Lal Wa Sarjangal, and in Charsadra (576).

According to analyst Thomas Ruttig, ‘Ghor is known for its particularly confusing pattern of conflicts, involving insurgent groups and “freelancing” militias, the dividing line between which is all but hermetic’ (577). For example, a group of fighters hailing from Ghor joined the branch of ISKP active in Jawzjan (578).

In 2017, self-declared members of Islamic State were active in the province (579); they do not seem to have any formal ties to the ISKP group in Nangarhar province (580).

ISKP-related incidents were reported in sources consulted by ACLED in Ghor in the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 January 2018 (581).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Ghor

In October 2017, the Afghan Ministry of Defense stated to have conducted ground and air operations in Ghor, without providing details about the impact of these operations (582). Further operations were reported in December 2017 (583) and January 2018 (584). During an operation in Lal Wa Sarjangal in February 2018, ANSF forces arrested what the assumed was a ‘senior ISKP commander’ (585).

2.11.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

In 2017, UNAMA documented 33 civilian victims (19 deaths and 14 injured), a 59 % decrease compared to 2016. Most of the victims were casualties from non-suicide IEDs, ground engagement, and unexploded ordinances or landmines (586). According to figures consulted by Pajhwok and without distinguishing between civilians or combatants, there were 85 people killed in Ghor in 2017 and 31 injured and there were 8 targeted attacks, roadside bombing and magnetic bomb explosions in the province (587). In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the majority of the province in the second-highest category (589).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 59 incidents related to insurgents in Ghor province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (589).

In October 2017, a suicide attacker targeted a local police commander and strongman linked to Jamiaat-e Islami in a mosque in Du Layna district. Depending on the source, 10, 20 or 30... people were killed in the attack (590). And in a clash between Taliban and members of the Hezb-e Islami in January 2018, two sons of a Hezb-e Islami commander were killed (591). In January 2018, two people were killed and six injured, including children and women, in an explosion inside a house in the capital Chaghcharan/Ferozkoh (592). The alleged son of one of the victims, also a commander of an ‘illegal armed group’, killed two persons in a revenge attack in Du Layna a few days later (593).

AP reported in March 2018 that a shepherd was killed by a roadside bomb intended to target the police. Five more were wounded (594). Later in March, the same happened twice in the vicinity of the provincial capital, killing in total three civilians and injuring five more (595).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

While ‘poppy-free’ until 2011, the UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 that area under opium poppy cultivation continuously expanded in the province, last time by 246 % (from 2016 to 2017). Chaghcharan, Pasaband and Taywara were said to be the main opium cultivating districts (596).

According to a local police officer, smugglers took advantage of the impassibility of the roads in order to smuggle drugs and arms (597).

While the province boasts three major rivers – Hariroud, Murghab and Farahroud – residents still lack drinking water. According to a high-ranking official, the government had strived to build a water supply system for the province capital, but powerful local individuals had thwarted these efforts (598).

In November 2017, humanitarian actors reported restricted access to an area north of the provincial capital Chaghcharan, Ghalmin. The area was said to be under insurgent control for two months then and humanitarian actors were unable to reach its IDPs ‘due to ongoing conflict and also landmines around the roads leading to the area’. As a result, 3,000 children could not be reached for their polio vaccinations (599). Access to health care was also reported to be ‘challenging’ in Pasaband (600). In January, five employees of the health authority were abducted while conducting a vaccination campaign in Chaghcharan, allegedly because this campaign was not launched from the insurgent-held areas (601) and in March 2018, four healthcare workers, doctor, a midwife, a vaccinator and a driver, were abducted in Saghar district, and were threatened during their abduction to pay 10 % of their income to the Taliban (602). This incident was confirmed by the Press Spokesman of the Province Governor, but denied by the Public Health Director (603).

During conflict between ANSF and insurgents, farmers in Taiwara district have been prevented from working their lands (604). In November 2017, humanitarian actors reported diversions of food and seeds consignments in Shahrak, due to ‘substantial presence’ of insurgents and illegal armed groups (605). In February 2018, five trucks carrying wheat for the WFP from Herat to Chaghcharan, again were targeted and consigned (606).

In December 2017 and January 2018, two private radio stations operating in the province were attacked and set on fire (607).

Displacement
UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 19 689 persons displaced from Ghor (7 885 from Chaghcharan; 234 fromCharsadra; 338 from Dawlatyar; 2 875 from Du Layna; 7 from Lal Wa Sarjangal; 350 from Pasaband; 35 from Saghar; 3 106 from Shahrak; 4 382 from Taywarah; 456 from Tolak; 21 Unknown) (608).

In November 2017, humanitarian actors reported that conflict and insurgent control of an area north of Chaghcharan displaced ‘hundreds of families’ in the area and to Chaghcharan (609). In February, nearly 600 people were reportedly displaced to Chaghcharan, from Pasaband, Charsadra, Taywarah, Tolak, Shahrak and Du Layna districts (610).

2.12 Helmand
2.12.1 Actors in the conflict
Insurgent groups in Helmand
Helmand is known for being a Taliban stronghold (611), the group controls or influences large stretches of this Afghan province (612), more specifically the northern and southern areas of Helmand. The province used to be a battleground for a long time, in particular the area around Sangin district (613).

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017 the Taliban fully control 14 districts nationwide, of which six in Helmand alone: Baghran, Musaqala, Nawzad, Sangin, Reg and Deh-e Shu. Further, they have a ‘high’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least twice a week) in Nad-e Ali/Marja district, and medium (districts attacked at least three times a month) or low presence (district attacked at least once in three months) in the rest of the province (614).

2017 was said to be one of the deadliest years for Taliban insurgents in Helmand, with 2 000 members killed (615). The ongoing military operations against the Taliban have also contributed to weakening the group (616). Nevertheless the Taliban are still recruiting new members among the local youth. Job opportunities are scarce, therefore people join the Taliban (617).

ISKP-related incidents were reported in the sources consulted by ACLED in the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 January 2018 (618).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Helmand

Military operations are being regularly conducted in the province (619). In September 2017, the ANSF conducted intense ground offensive search operation in order to clear Nawa district from insurgents, after having regained it from insurgents previously. While they managed to open and clear the road to Nawa district, the roads to Nad-e Ali/Marja and Garmser remained closed, according to humanitarian actors in the region (620). In November 2017 and January 2018, the ANSF freed dozens of civilian abductees together with ANSF members held in captivity by the Taliban (621). In February 2018, it was reported that Afghan forces, supported by US troops, had been able to gain ground in recent months (622), even though the Taliban controlled about half of the province (623).

There are air strikes as well \(^{(624)}\), some of which are causing heavy losses to the insurgents \(^{(625)}\). Air strikes also target illicit drug labs, which in Helmand constitute one of the main sources of income for the Taliban \(^{(626)}\). According to accounts from areas affected by the bombing, ‘the air strikes have mainly hurt civilians and their livelihoods rather than the Taliban’ \(^{(627)}\).

The Taliban tend to attack checkpoints and smaller bases at night \(^{(628)}\). For this reason, night-raids by Afghan special forces have been reintroduced. These are controversial because they resulted in high rates of civilian casualties in the past and were viewed as unacceptable violations of privacy, but have meanwhile been cautiously welcomed by local officials and activists \(^{(629)}\).

Sangorian, a government-affiliated militia comprising some 500 to 1,000 fighters, was founded by the Afghan secret service (NDS – Directorate of National Security) to infiltrate insurgent groupings and fight them from the inside. Sangorian claims credit for defeating Taliban attempts to overrun the provincial capital, Lashkar Gah \(^{(630)}\).

2.12.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

In 2017, UNAMA documented 991 civilian victims (386 deaths and 605 injured). This represents an increase of 10% compared to 2016, contrary to the national trends in 2017. This is the second-highest number, after Kabul. Most of the victims were casualties from ground engagement, non-suicide IEDs or suicide and complex attacks \(^{(631)}\). According to the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission, however, there were 1,900 civilian casualties in Helmand in 2017 \(^{(632)}\). The increase in civilian casualties was, according to UNAMA, mainly driven by suicide and complex attacks and other types of incidents involving IEDs \(^{(633)}\).

UNOCHA considered Helmand as one of the ‘most conflict affected’ provinces \(^{(634)}\). In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the districts in the middle of the province - Lashkargah, Nahr-e Saraj, Sangin, Nad-e Ali/Marja and Garmser - in the highest category. The northern districts Bagran, Kajaki and Musaqala were in the middle category, and all other districts in the lower two categories (635).

UNOCHA considered Helmand as a province of ‘high protection concern’, defined as: ‘new IDPs, natural disaster affected people, returnees, refugees and vulnerable members of the host community’, as well as ‘non-displaced conflict affected people’. These are people living in close proximity (1 km) to explosive hazards resulting from conflict (636).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 308 incidents related to insurgents in Helmand province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (637).

Air operations caused 67 civilian casualties (58 deaths and nine injured) in Helmand in 2017, according to UNAMA (638).

In 2017, for instance, the number of civilian casualties resulting from air strikes in Sangin district in Helmand province, in Chahar Dara district in Kunduz province and in Deh Bala district in Nangarhar province accounted for 50 % of all civilian casualties caused by international air strikes in the whole of Afghanistan, a comparatively high rate (639). For example, an air strike was said to have killed a child in Nad-e Ali in March 2018 (640).

The provincial capital Lashkargah is reportedly witnessing protracted conflict over the past two years (641). In a heavy explosion targeting a border police post in Lashkargah in November 2017, one policeman was killed, others were wounded and several houses near the explosion were ‘badly damaged’ according to a statement of the provincial government (642). The targets for three of these attacks were the branches of the New Kabul Bank, at a moment when ANSF personnel lined up for collecting their wages. These incidents caused in all 112 civilian casualties (32 deaths and 80 injured) in 2017. Other attacks targeted ANSF - one convoy in Nawayi Barakzai (Nawa) district and one check post in Nahr-e Sarraj district. These caused six civilian casualties (the death of one civilian man and injuries to five children) (643). In December 2017, a pressure-plate IED placed on a main road and intended for Afghan national security forces killed another six civilians, including a woman and a girl, and injured two men and a boy in Marja district (644). The number of victims of pressure-plate IEDs in Helmand rose by 40 % compared to 2016, to 235 civilian casualties (103 deaths and 132 injured) in 2017 (645). In February 2018, one person was killed and two other injured when a car bomb exploded near an NDS building (646). According to the AIHRC, eight children and women were wounded in this attack, and schools, kindergartens, health clinics and residential homes were damaged (647). A suicide bomber targeted the audience of a wrestling game in Lashkargah in March 2018, reportedly killing at least 15 people and injuring more than 40, including children. This attack prompted a peace sit-in and hunger strike (648). The protests later spread to Gereshk district (649). Hundreds of people took to the streets, holding a sit-in and pledging to organise a long march in the Taliban-controlled city of Musa Qala to demand peace talks. The protesters also included women, who are rarely seen in the streets in this conservative region of Afghanistan (650).

On the other hand, UNAMA noted a decrease in large-scale offensive operations in civilian population centres, causing 467 civilian casualties (145 deaths and 322 injured), a 7% decrease compared to 2016. Still, the majority of the civilian casualties in Helmand were due to ground engagement and Helmand saw the second-highest number of victims of ground engagements (651). For example, in October 2017 in Nawa district, a seven-year-old boy was killed and three boys, three women and two men (all from one family) were injured by stray bullets as they were fleeing the fighting in their vehicle (652).

Helmand is among the provinces with a high number of incidents of detonation of explosive remnants of war causing civilian casualties, and also among the provinces with the highest use of indirect weapons. This highlights, according to UNAMA, the link between the number of victims from explosive remnants of war, and the use of indirect weapons, such as mortars, rockets and grenades (653). There are examples of incidents with civilian casualties.

- Eight people, including a child, died when a mortar shell hit their home in October 2017 (654).
- In December 2017, three children were maimed when they were herding cattle and hit a landmine (655).
- In December 2017, a car bomb targeting a convoy of Public Order Police, killed two persons and injured 31 others, according to government officials quoted in Pajhwok, mostly civilians (656).
- A mortar landing on a residential home in Marja in February 2018 killed four members of one family, and wounded three more (657).

In targeted killings, the police chief of Nad-e Ali was killed in September 2017 (658), and a cleric in January 2018 (659). A suicide attack on a NDS building in Lashkargah targeted a meeting between Taliban and NDS (660).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

The province is a major centre of opium production (661), which to a large degree helps finance Taliban activities (662) and encourages corruption among the political class (663). According to estimates by government officials, in early 2017, the Taliban controlled 85% of the poppy-growing province of Helmand (664). According to government officials, more and more farmers in the central, southern and northern districts of Helmand province are cultivating opium poppy (665). In 2017, Helmand province was the country’s major poppy cultivating province (666).

The conflict has an impact on the delivery of health care services: in 2017, Helmand was in the highest category of provinces experiencing ‘humanitarian incidents’, including eight incidents of targeting health workers or health facilities (667). 24% of all children in Helmand did not complete all immunisation vaccination rounds due to the conflict (668). And according to UNOCHA, maternal mortality rate in Helmand far exceeds the already ‘unacceptably high’ national average (669). According to Action Contre La Faim, a humanitarian actor in the province, ‘Lashkargah and its outskirts have been strongly affected by fighting and displacement in and suffer from limited availability of public services and lack of economic development’. Lack of access to sanitation facilities and clean water lead to diarrhoea and chronic malnutrition (670). In March 2018, the provincial director responsible for education told Pajhwok that ANSF had occupied 20 schools in Helmand and used at least a part of them as a security post. Of the 400 schools in Helmand, 102 were closed. This affected the access to education for of 165 000 students, including 23 000 girls (671).

An NGO affiliated with the Education Department signed a memorandum of understanding (MoU) with the Taliban in Helmand on solutions to education-related problems. The two sides have agreed to protect of madrassas, schools and other buildings and to open closed schools and madrassas. The Educational Department of the province was not involved, as the Spokesman of the Governor confirmed (672).

Displacement

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 17 356 persons displaced from Helmand (7 from Baghran; 1 118 from Garmser; 89 from Kajaki; 3 292 from

Local authorities reported thousands of IDPs from conflict-affected areas. In November 2017, for example, 7,500 IDPs arrived in Gereshk town, Nahr-e Saraj district (674). In January 2018 1,200 displaced people arrived from Sangin and 2,100 from Nad-e-Ali/Marja arrived in Lashkargah, ‘reportedly due to sporadic clashes and incidents with improvised explosive devices’ (675).

2.13 Herat

2.13.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Herat

According to a BBC study of January 2018 based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘medium’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) in Shindand and Gulran districts, and a ‘low’ presence or activity (district attacked at least once in three months) in Kushk, Kushk Kuna, Ghoryan, Guzara, Adraskan, and Chisht-i Sharif (676).

Various sources claim that Iran is training and funding Afghan Taliban fighters (677).

Rivalling Taliban groups clashed with each other in Shindand district in October, causing dozens of casualties from both sides (678).

In Herat, ISKP has for the first time claimed responsibility for attacks carried out outside Nangarhar and Kabul provinces (679).

ISKP-related incidents (acts of violence against civilians) were recorded by sources consulted by ACLED in Herat province in the period 1 January 2017 – 31 January 2018 (680).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Herat

In November 2017, ANSF conducted a ten-day military operation codenamed Azam Kahlid 21 in Shindand (681). In December 2017, humanitarian actors in the region reported ‘large scale operations’ by international military forces and ANSF in Shindand district in which ‘many insurgents were killed’. However, according to the same source, after ANSF withdrew, insurgent splinter groups clashed with each other again (682). Clashes in Shindand were also reported in December 2017 (683).

An air strike on a Taliban gathering in Chisht-e Sharif in October 2017 reportedly killed hundreds of Taliban (684). However UNHCR stated there were no Taliban casualties in the air strike (685). Clashes and another air strike in Shindand in December 2017 killed eight Taliban in Chisht-e Sharif (686).

Italian army forces are stationed in Herat to assist Afghan forces in the west of Afghanistan under the Train Advise Assist Command West (TAAC-W) (687).

2.13.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

UNAMA documented 495 civilian casualties (238 deaths and 257 injured) in 2017, contrary to the national trends in 2017, an increase by 37 % compared to 2016. IEDs, suicide and complex attacks and targeted and deliberate killings were the main causes of civilian casualties in Herat province (688). Suicide and complex attacks and other types of incidents involving IEDs were the main drivers of the increase in Herat (689). While fighting increased in Herat in 2017, UNAMA recorded fewer civilian casualties from ground engagements in this province: 87 civilian casualties (38 deaths and 49 injured), a 58 % decrease compared to 2016 (690).

In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the southern districts Shindand in the highest category and Adraskan in the category below (691).

UNOCHA considered Herat as a province of ‘high protection concern’, defined as: ‘new IDPs, natural disaster affected people, returnees, refugees and vulnerable members of the host community’, as well as ‘non-displaced conflict affected people’. These are people living in close proximity (1 km) to explosive hazards resulting from conflict (692).

Herat, once declared the ‘deadliest province for landmines’ was declared ‘landmine-free’ in February 2018 (693). In mid-February 2018, the Halo Trust mine clearance organisation announced that 14 of 16 districts of the province were considered safe following 10 years of minefield clearance operations. In these areas, the Press Spokesman of the Province Governor confirmed, there was no longer a danger of being exposed to land mines and other unexploded ordnance. Given the bad security situation and the presence of insurgents, the districts of Gulran and Shindand have not been cleared of mines yet (694).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 125 incidents related to insurgents in Herat province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website.

UNAMA documented an increasing number of victims from ISKP in Herat province, where they claimed one complex attack and two remote-controlled IEDs in 2017. For example, in December 2017, ISKP detonated a remote-controlled IED outside a library in a predominately ethnic Hazara neighbourhood, killing one civilian woman and three men and injuring a boy, two women, and seven men according to UNAMA. In March 2018, they again claimed and attack on a Shia mosque in Herat city: two suicide attackers tried to enter the mosque during prayers, but were repulsed by security guards. One was killed and the other detonated his suicide vest outside, killing at least one person and wounding eight others.

Other incidents of IEDs or roadside bombs with civilian casualties include:

- A bomb hidden in a motorbike exploded in front of a busy shop in Herat city in December 2017, killing between three or four people and wounding six to ten more;
- A motorcycle hitting a roadside bomb in Shindand in September 2017 killing a civilian and wounding another;
- A bomb exploded either inside or near a civilian house in Shindand district in January 2018 and reportedly killed five civilians, among them women and children, and injured three more, believed to be relatives of Taliban members;
- A car hit a roadside bomb in Kushk district in January 2018, killing its driver;
- A roadside bomb killed at least 12 civilians in Gulran district in January 2018, wounding another person;
- In March 2018, a motorcycle packed with explosives was detonated near a busy market, killing one person and wounding seven more.

A roadside bomb further targeted ANSF personnel in Ghoryan district in September 2017; and militants raided a security checkpoint in Koshk Kuhna in October 2017. Clashes were also reported in Guzara in March 2018.

In two separate incidents two employees of a road construction company and later five teachers were abducted in Shindand district in March 2018. One of the teachers was subsequently killed (708).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

The province is said to be a major corridor for human trafficking to Iran, especially the trafficking of children (709). UNHCR noted, however, that the main illegal entry point for migrants is Nimroz, while Herat sees only ‘small movements’ of illegal migrants crossing into Iran (710).

In a parallel justice case, a woman was shot by the Taliban in Shindand in September 2017 (711). In December 2017, humanitarian actors in the region reported an acid attack on two girls going to school in Herat city (712). According to reporting, the girls may have been targeted because their father is a civil society activist (713).

In 2017, UNODC reported an increase in poppy cultivation by 432 % compared to 2016, mainly in Shindand and Kushk (Rabat-e Sangi), ‘where security was very poor’ according to UNODC (714).

In November 2017, the chairman of Herat’s education department declared that over 219 schools, or nearly 23 % of all schools in Herat, were controlled by the Taliban. Because of the insecurity in these areas, the government is unable to control education in Shindand, Goryan, Kushk Kuhna, Adraskan and Obe districts. In these areas, the Taliban monitor the schools, and the government official voiced his satisfaction with the Taliban monitoring (715). In Pashtun Zarghoon, the Taliban were said to have burned a public school for girls in December 2017, affecting the education of 600 girls (716).

Work on the Afghan section of the TAPI line was inaugurated in mid-March 2018. This 1,800 km natural gas pipeline is to supply Turkmenistan, Afghanistan, Pakistan and India with 33 billion cubic metres of Turkmen natural gas for 30 years. The pipeline is to run alongside the Herat-Kandahar highway, thus through an area with a strong Taliban presence. However, the Taliban declared their support for TAPI, calling it an ‘important project’ for the country (717). Within the scope of the TAPI project, 70 Taliban have agreed to join in the peace process (718). Thousands of security forces have been deployed to ensure security for the TAPI project (719).

Displacement
UNOCHA recorded, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, 7 134 persons displaced from Herat (889 from Adraskan; 574 from Gulran; 21 from Injil; 69 from Kushk; 208 from Kushk Kohna; 59 from Obe; 5 314 from Shindand) (720).

In September 2017, almost 1 500 individuals were displaced from Shindand and Adraskan districts in Herat and neighbouring provinces Ghor and Badghis to Herat city (721).

In November 2017, a number of humanitarian actors, part of the Protection Cluster, reported the destruction of IDP shelters in Police Rah makeshift shelters in Injil district on the highway to Karukh, despite their calls to halt the destruction of IDP shelters before winter (722).

With one of the two major border crossings to/from Iran in Islam Qala, Herat is one of the major exit and entry points for migration to/from Iran. Some returnees do not return to their area of origin and stay in Herat. The city’s absorption capacity has so far ‘proven to be high’, according to Oxfam (723).

According to IOM’s Displacement Tracking Matrix, 489,363 individuals or one in five residents of Herat is either an IDP or returnee from abroad, of whom 164 871 live in the Jebrail settlement of Herat city, the largest IDP- and returnee-settlement in the country. More than 8 000 IDPs and returnees in Herat live in tents or in open air. 77 518 people, or 4 % of the population, fled their homes in the years 2012-2017. Over 100 000 people from Herat, or 6 % of its population, fled abroad in the years 2012-2017 (724). UNHCR stated they weren’t able to confirm this information (725).

For more information on Herat City, see EASO Country of Origin Information Report: Afghanistan - Key socio-economic indicators, state protection, and mobility in Kabul City, Mazar-e Sharif, and Herat City (726).

2.14 Jawzjan/Jowzjan
2.14.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Jawzjan
The Taliban are active in some districts of the province (727), with certain districts having come under their control or influence (728). According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘high’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least twice a week) in the southern districts Qush Tepa and Darzab and a ‘medium’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) to ‘low’ presence (district attacked at least once in three months) in northern Khanyab, Qarqin, Mardyan, Mingajik, Aqcha, Khanqa and Fayzabad (729).

Local residents reported to Reuters that since Qari Hekmatyar, a former Taliban commander, switched sides to ISKP (730), many foreign fighters have arrived in southern Darzab and Qush Tepa. These foreign fighters are accused of abuses, such as forcing local girls into marriage, and forcing schools to allow bomb- and gun training to take place in their classes (731). Since the end of 2017, there have been several reports about foreign IS fighters joining ISKP in southern Jawzjan including French, Algerian and Uzbeks nationals (732) where they are allegedly being trained by mentors from Sudan, Chechnya, Uzbekistan and France according to Pajhwok (733). An ISKP training centre is believed to be located in Sardar village, Darzab (734). In December 2017, local officials claimed ISKP was recruiting children as young as 9-10 years old in the province (735) and officials were quoted fearing ISKP could soon extract minerals, including gold and uranium, from mines in Darzab and Qush Tepa (736). It is not clear whether these IS fighters are allied with the ISKP group in Nangarhar (737). Another source alleges there are contacts between the two IS groups (738). Jawzjan province witnesses armed conflict between Taliban and ISKP (739).

ISKP-related security-relevant incidents (skirmishes and acts of violence against civilians) were recorded in sources consulted by ACLED in the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 January 2018 (740).

Government forces and military operations in Jawzjan fighters (Uzbeks, French, Algerians, Chechen) (\(^{743}\)). ISKP commanders were also among those killed (\(^{744}\)).

Clashes between the Afghan forces and IS supporters and Taliban fighters are also taking place (\(^{745}\)). Clashes between ANSF and Taliban were also reported in Faizabad (\(^{746}\)) and Aqcha (\(^{747}\)).

In Darzab and Qush Tepa districts, a three-party conflict raged, with both Taliban and ANSF fighting against a self-identified ISKP group, and each other, for control over the area. All parties conducted offensives, including ANSF and international military forces’ air strikes, in which officials often claim to have killed foreign fighters (\(^{748}\)).

In some districts women took up arms joining militia to fight back insurgents in Qush Tepa (\(^{749}\)) and in Darzab (\(^{750}\)).

2.14.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

In 2017, UNAMA documented 118 civilian victims (46 deaths and 72 injured). This represents a 47% decrease compared to 2016. Most of the victims were casualties from ground engagements, followed by targeted and deliberate killings and non-suicide IEDs (\(^{751}\)).

In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the southern district Darzab in the highest category, and Qush Tepa in the category below. The districts Mardyan, Aqcha and Khanaqa were in the middle category and all other districts were in the lower two categories (\(^{752}\)).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 144 incidents related to insurgents in Jawzjan province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (\(^{753}\)).

Incidents including civilian casualties include the ones mentioned below.

In September 2017, members of ISKP abducted 12 civilians from a Taliban-controlled area in Qush Tepa district, in order to exchange them with 20 people abducted by Taliban (754). Other sources reported the abduction of 35 civilians, by both sides of the conflict (755).

In January 2018, a local uprising commander was quoted reporting ten civilians being killed in an air strike targeting ISKP members in Darzab district, including five women, four men and a child (756). To RFE/RL, the Chief of Police in Jawzjan acknowledged the death of two civilians who he said attended the ISKP meeting for a matter of conflict resolution (757). A few days later, Tolonews also reported that ten civilians were killed and four wounded in an air strike targeting ISKP in Darzab, but in a different setting (758). It is unclear if these reports describe the same incident.

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

UNAMA documented one case of parallel justice structure punishment by the ‘self-identified ISKP group’ in Jawzjan (759). In December 2017, members of this group shot a man for killing his own father in Darzab district (760).

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 that Jawzjan lost its poppy-free status in 2015. Since then the province area under opium poppy cultivation continuously expanded. In 2017, opium poppy cultivation in Jawzjan province was estimated at 3,237 hectares. This is almost eight times more than in 2016 (761).

Both ALP and other pro-government groups in Jawzjan are being accused of abuses and causing civilian casualties (762).

Local officials reported that all schools in Darzab and Qush Tepa were closed by members of ISKP in 2017. This affected 50 to 70 schools or 30,000 children (763). Due to insecurity, access to markets and food supply were badly affected, resulting in rising food prices and increased food insecurity in Qush Tepa district, especially in rural areas, according to an assessment by WFP in September 2017 (764).

Displacement

UNOCHA recorded, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, 9 646 persons displaced from Jawzjan (735 from Aqcha; 2 786 from Darzab; 630 from Khanaqa; 1 456 from Mardyan; 14 from Mingajik; 2 821 from Qushtepa; 1 204 from Shibergan) (765).

Numerous families were displaced from the Aqcha, Qush Tepa and Darzab districts to the centre of the province (766).

In February 2018, local officials were quoted stating ‘thousands of civilians’ were displaced by Taliban-ISKP fighting in Darzab and Qush Tepa (767).

2.15 Kandahar

2.15.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Kandahar

Kandahar is a former stronghold of the Taliban (768). Being considered the place where the group was founded, it is of strategic importance to the Taliban. A major source of income for the Taliban in Kandahar province is opium production. The province borders on Pakistan’s Baluchistan province, which serves as a safe haven and general recruiting ground for the grouping (769). ISKP-related incidents (acts of violence against civilians) were recorded in open sources consulted by ACLED in Kandahar province in the period 1 January 2017 – 31 January 2018 (770).

According to a BBC study of January 2018 based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017 the Taliban fully control 14 districts nationwide, of which one in Kandahar: Reg district in the south. Further, they have a ‘medium’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) and ‘low’ (district attacked at least once in three months) ‘active and physical presence’ in most other districts, except for Daman district and Kandahar district, where Taliban are said to have initiated deadly suicide attacks, car bombs and targeted killings (771).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Kandahar

In February and March 2018, security forces had carried out operations (772).

Air strikes are being conducted as well (773) in which insurgents were killed (774). Also, there were clashes between Taliban militants and security forces (775). For example, ANSF offensives, including air strikes, aiming at regaining territory were reported in Ghorak and Nad-e Ali (776).

Female police also provide assistance on the front lines: Some 110 female officers are serving throughout Kandahar and also at the airport (777).

2.15.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

The UN reported in February the ‘insurgents continued to exert pressure on Afghan security forces by launching coordinated attacks on checkpoints, outposts and bases of the ANSF in Kandahar’ (778).

In 2017 UNAMA documented 716 civilian victims (271 deaths and 445 injured), a decrease of 18% compared to 2016. Most of the victims were casualties from non-suicide IEDs, ground engagements, and unexploded ordnances and landmines (779). UNAMA recorded 110 civilian casualties (25 deaths and 85 injured) from unexploded ordnances (UXO) in Kandahar in 2017 (780). Additionally, UNAMA reported on civilian casualties by cross-border shelling in Kandahar in 2017 (781).

UNOCHA considered Kandahar as one of the ‘most conflict affected’ provinces (782). In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the districts Maywand, Shahwalikot and Nesh in the highest category. The districts of Ghorak, Khakrez, Kandahar City (Dand), Daman, Arghestan and Miyanshin were in the category below (783).

UNOCHA considered Kandahar as one of the four provinces where persons exhibiting very high protection concerns are located, defined as: ‘new IDPs, natural disaster affected people, returnees, refugees and vulnerable members of the host community’, as well as ‘non-displaced conflict affected people’. These are people living in close proximity (1 km) to explosive hazards resulting from conflict (784).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 172 incidents related to insurgents in Kandahar province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (785).

The decrease in casualties from ground engagements in Kandahar was, according to UNAMA ‘significant’: a 25% decrease, but still 192 civilian casualties (25 deaths and 167 injured) (786). For example in September 2017, five boys were killed by a stray bullet while hiding in their garden in Khakrez (787). On the other hand, Kandahar is among the provinces with a high number of incidents of detonation of explosive remnants of war causing civilian casualties, and also among the provinces with the highest use of indirect weapons. This highlights, according to UNAMA, the link between the number of victims from explosive remnants of war, and the use of indirect weapons, such as mortars, rockets and grenades (788).

Pressure-plate IEDs (PP-IED) caused 168 civilian casualties (85 deaths and 83 injured), a 36% decrease (789). In September 2017, six civilians were killed by an IED hidden in their truck (790) and in November 2017, for example, in Arghistan district a pressure-plate IED killed eight civilians, including three women and a two-year-old boy, and injured two more. According to UNAMA, ‘the Taliban had placed this device on that road to restrict the movement of the Afghan national security forces who had recently re-taken the village’ (791).

UNAMA reported seven incidents of search operations causing 37 civilian casualties (25 deaths and 12 injured) in Kandahar in 2017. For example three men and a boy were killed and two men, four boys and a girl injured, all inside their homes, by stray bullets during a search operation in Shahwalikot (792).

More examples of IEDs killing civilians are:

- In September an IED incident in Daman district killed 6 civilians (793)
- A roadside bomb killing eight civilians, including three women and a child, in Maroof district in November 2017 (794);
- An IED targeting a convoy of international military forces killed a female civilian passer-by and wounded four to seven more civilians in Kandahar city or Daman district, depending on the source, in December 2017 (795).
- In January 2018, a suicide bomber targeted a police convoy in Kandahar City, killing two policemen and two civilians, and wounding six policemen and four civilians (796).

In September 2017, humanitarian actors reported that insurgents intensified their attacks and clashes in Shahwalikot, Khakrez, Arghistan and Ghorak districts. This resulted in civilian...

casualties. In response, ANSF conducted air strikes and ground offensives, reportedly also killing 13 civilians (797). In September 2017, for example, a woman was killed and five other persons wounded when their car was being fired at in Shahwalikot in September 2017 (798).

In two attacks on ANSF personnel, in Maroof in September and in Maywand in October 2017, the Taliban used captured Humvees as suicide bombs, killing dozens of soldiers (799). The Taliban attacked and overran briefly the Maroof district centre in September 2017 (800) and again conducted coordinated attacks on its District Administrative Centre (DAC). These attacks resulted in displacement to Kandahar city and inside the districts. Further attacks on ANSF check points were reported in Arghandab (801).

In November 2017, the Taliban attacked 15 security posts in one night in three different districts: Maywand, Zhari and Naway, killing dozens of policemen (802).

In November 2017, the International NGO Safety office reported that the focus of the insurgents was Maywand, with ‘many coordinated attacks’ and the overrunning of security checkpoints. Further, a large-scale suicide attack targeted an international military convoy in Kandahar city / Dand district (803).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

In September 2017, UNOCHA reported that 60 000 children were reportedly deprived from polio vaccination, because insurgents did not grant the vaccination teams permission to work in areas under their control (804). According to the UN Humanitarian Coordinator, with five cases in 2017, the district of Shahwalikot has the highest number of polio cases in the world (805). In December 2017, another case emerged of a 2-year-old girl was diagnosed with wild polio in December 2017 (806).

In 2017, Kandahar experienced ten incidents of targeting health workers or health facilities (807). For example, in December 2017, NDS Special Forces raided and partly burned a healthcare facility in Maywand (808). And 16.5% of the population on Kandahar suffers from acute malnutrition, which, according to UNOCHA, exceeds emergency levels (809). In January 2018, two NGO staff were reportedly beaten and detained by two members of the Afghan Local Police in Maywand (810). In January 2018, humanitarian actors reported difficulties in reaching IDP families in Khakrez district (811).

Kandahar was in 2017 the second most important poppy cultivating province, after Helmand. Kandahar province also saw an increase in poppy cultivation by 37% (+ 7,500 hectares as against a total of 18,010 hectares), while 48 hectares were eradicated compared to four hectares eradicated in 2016 (812). In a bid to find alternative crops for farmers currently cultivating narcotics plants, the Afghan government will make pistachio fields available, including 250 fields in Kandahar (813). The main opium poppy cultivation districts were Maywand, Zahri, Nesh, Spin Boldak and Panjwayi (814).

During an operation in Maywand district in January-February 2018, a special forces unit of the NDS, backed by air force, claimed to have killed 50 Taliban and arrested 32 individuals (815). However, witnesses told HRW that in addition to the 50 Taliban killed, at least 20 civilians were also killed, while fleeing the bombardments. The NDS operatives were also accused of summarily executing detained persons during this operation (816).

Kandahar, alongside four other provinces (Herat, Farah, Nimroz and Helmand), will accommodate the Turkmenistan-Afghanistan-Pakistan-India (TAPI) natural gas pipeline (817). These provinces are largely under Taliban control, and the security situation there is problematic. In view of building the pipeline, the Taliban and neighbouring Pakistan have signalled their willingness to support the TAPI project (818). In Afghanistan, the pipeline is to be built alongside the Kandahar-Herat section of the highway. Thousands of security forces have been deployed to ensure security for the TAPI project (819).

Displacement

UNOCHA recorded, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, 13,230 persons displaced from Kandahar (35 from Arghandab; 245 from Arghistan; 63 from Daman; 622 from Ghorak; 933 from Khakrez; 616 from Maruf; 67 from Maywand; 401 from Miyanshin; 7,679 from Nesh; 1,892 from Shahwalikot; 677 Unknown) (820).

In October 2017, humanitarian actors reported conflict and insecurity leading to displacement of several hundreds, to Kandahar city, and in Ghorak and Sangin districts, two districts considered hard to reach as the road to Ghorak was closed for civilians (821).

According to IOM’s Displacement Tracking Matrix, 257,899 individuals or 17% of the population of Kandahar is either an IDP or returnee from abroad, of which almost 12,000 live either in tents or in the open air. 196,266 people, or 16% of the population, fled their homes in the years 2012-2017. Over 16,000 people from Kandahar, or 1% of its population, fled abroad in the years 2012-2017 (822).

2.16 Kapisa

2.16.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Kapisa

Taliban militants are active in several districts; their activities include targeted/deliberate killings, by means of small arms fire or explosives, on security forces, government officials, NATO and foreign diplomatic personnel and Afghan civilians (823).

Insurgents operate in the following districts: Tagab, Alasay, and Nejrab (824).

According to a BBC study of January 2018 based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, in 399 districts and questioning 1,200 individuals, the Taliban have a ‘high’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least twice a week) in Tagab and ‘medium’ presence and activity (districts attacked at least three times a month) in Alasay and Nejrab. The BBC also reports a low Taliban presence and activity in the Kohband and Hisa-i Duwum-e Kohestan districts (district attacked at least once in three months) (825).

No ISKP-related incidents were recorded in sources consulted by ACLED in Kapisa province in the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 January 2018 (826).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Kapisa

Military operations are being conducted in the province (827), with Taliban and ISKP supporters (828) and sometimes their leaders being killed (829).

Air strikes were carried out as well, involving the killing of Taliban commanders (830). There are clashes between the insurgents and Afghan security forces (831).

2.16.2 General security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

In 2017 UNAMA documented 101 civilian victims (34 deaths and 67 injured), a 19 % decrease compared to 2016. Most of the victims were casualties from ground engagement, non-suicide IEDs, and targeted and deliberate killings (833).

In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the district Tagab in the highest category and the districts Nejrab in the category below. Alasay in the middle category, and all other districts in the lower two categories (834). EMERGENCY NGO Hospital in Kabul reported to UNOCHA an increased number of war-wounded referrals from Kapisa (835).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 78 incidents related to insurgents in Kapisa province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (836).

A remote-controlled IED detonated in a bazaar in Hisa-i Duwum-e Kohistan in September 2017, wounding nine civilians, including children (837).

In a targeted attack, the head of the provincial Ulema council and his bodyguard were both killed in September 2017 in Hisa-i –Awal-e Kohistan. This was, according to Tolonews, the latest in ‘a number of local government and security officials [that] have been killed in different incidents in Kapisa province’ in the previous months (838). In another targeted attack, gunmen shot and killed the chief of police in February 2018 (839). And in March 2018, an ALP commander was killed in Tagab together with all other members of his family, including women and children (840).

An air strike in Nejrab district in November 2017 targeting a Taliban commander killed at least five civilians, including women and children, presumably family of the target (841).

Military operations in Tagab in November 2017 caused displacement of 600 families or 4,200 individuals, and reportedly also civilian casualties and destruction of houses (842). See also Displacement.

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

In September 2017, the Taliban reportedly threatened to punish all women who went out to the bazaar and all shopkeepers who sold goods to women in Tagab district. The Taliban reportedly only gave permission for accompanied women to go out to visit the doctor. Local security officials confirmed the ban on women in the public sphere, but denied it was being implemented (843).

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 poppy cultivation had increased with 59% to 968 hectares in 2017. Poppy cultivation occurred primarily in Tagab and Alasay districts (844).

Displacement

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 13 690 persons displaced from Kapisa (2 002 from Alasay; 56 from Hisa-i Awal-e Kohestan; 238 from Nejrab; 11 394 from Tagab) (845).

UNOCHA continuously reported conflict and insecurity induced displacement in and from Tagab district, with a peak of 4 200 displaced in November 2017 (846).

In January and February 2018, UNOCHA additionally reported the displacement of hundreds of displaced families from Alasay and Nejrab districts, for reasons of military operations, threats, insecurity and intimidation (847). In mid-March 2018, some 1 300 persons were displaced to the Mahmud-e Raqi, Hisa-i Awal-e Kohestan and Hisa-i Duwum-e Kohestan districts from Kapisa, Laghman, Nuristan and Parwan provinces due to ongoing armed conflict in their villages and insecurity (848).

2.17 Khost

2.17.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent Groups in Khost

In September 2017 an international organisation was quoted in EASO’s Afghanistan Security Situation report from December 2017, saying that the long and porous border makes Khost province of great strategic importance as many insurgents have found a safe haven across the border in Pakistan. The Haqqani network is named as the dominant insurgent actor in the province (869). The province is the birthplace of Jalaluddin Haqqani, the founder of the Haqqani network (850). The Haqqani network operates in Khost province (851).

In recent years, parts of Khost province have seen a Taliban-led insurgency (852). According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘low’ (district attacked at least once in three months) or ‘medium’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) ‘active and physical presence’ in the entire province (853). Suicide attacks and other attacks occur (854).

ISKP-related security-relevant incidents (acts of violence against civilians, skirmishes) were recorded in sources consulted by ACLED in Khost province in the period 1 January 2017 – 31 January 2018 (855).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Khost

Military operations are being conducted in the province (856). Some high-ranking Taliban leaders were killed in air strikes (857). There are clashes between insurgents and Afghan security forces (858).

Military operations involving ANSF and international military forces were launched in October 2017 (859).

The Khost Protection Force is a pro-government militia, outside the ANSF structure and supported and trained by the CIA (860), that operates in Khost and Paktyia.

The Ghulam Khan border crossing into North Waziristan is located in Khost; it was closed in 2014 in the course of a military operation against the Taliban and other groupings (863). The border crossing, which lies on a major trading route between Pakistan and Afghanistan, was not reopened until early March 2018 (864).

In 2017 UNAMA documented 181 civilian victims (41 deaths and 140 injured), a 21 % increase compared to 2016, contrary to the national trend. Most of the victims were casualties of non-suicide IEDs, targeted and deliberate killings, and suicide and complex attacks (865). According to UNAMA, the increase was mainly driven by suicide and complex attacks and other types of incidents involving IEDs (866).

In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the district Sabari in the second-highest category, the districts Terzayi, Khost/Matun, Musakhel, Nadirshahkot, and Spera in the middle category, and all other districts in the lower two categories (867).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 71 incidents related to insurgents in Khost province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (868).

In an air strike by ANSF in Alisher district in February 2018, seven members of one family were killed (869). In February 2018, Pajhwok reported on military operations in Sabari and Alisher districts, reportedly causing several casualties, among them a girl (870). In March 2018, local residents claimed that this operation caused the death of four members of one family (871).

UNAMA reported specific problems with the Khost Protection Force. This is a pro-government militia, outside the ANSF structure and supported and trained by the CIA (872), that operates in Khost and Paktyia. There have been allegations of human rights abuses, criminality and civilian casualties attributed to the Khost Protection Force. Although the number of civilian casualties attributed to this group decreased in 2017, from 32 in 2016 to 5 in 2017, UNAMA was worried about the atmosphere of impunity in which this group continues to operate (873). A report from Khost issued on a US-based progressive news site in December 2017 documented life in the province. It quoted residents ‘living under a regime of fear’ from constant surveillance, the abusive behaviour in impunity of the Khost Protection Force and the imminent threat of drone and regular air force strikes (874).

Drone strikes were reported in Khost in September 2017 targeting a vehicle carrying several Taliban (875) and October 2017, targeting a Pakistani Taliban (TTP) commander (876).

In September 2017, a remote controlled IED exploded on a market, killing four civilians and wounding 14, including two boys (877). In December 2017, a bomb exploded near a football stadium where Gulbuddin Hekmatyar was holding a political rally, without reports of casualties (878).

Targeted killings include, the killing of a healthcare professional in Tera Zayi in October 2017 (879) and the abduction and killing of a civilian whom the Taliban – incorrectly according to UNAMA – assumed being a police officer (880).

In September 2017, Pajhwok reported that ‘heavy weapons were used every day’ in a tribal conflict between Mangal and Moqbil tribes in Khost, leading to the displacement of dozens of families (881). In December 2017, Pajhwok reported on the resumption of the clashes, reportedly causing several casualties (882).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

In October 2017, residents demonstrated to ask the resignation of chief of police and the head of the crime branch, over allegations of incompetence and collision with criminals. They claimed crimes such as armed robberies and kidnappings had surged and the authorities were not doing enough to prevent them or prosecute those involved (883). In a kidnapping attempt in September 2017, for example, a businessman was killed in the capital Khost City. The assailants reportedly also wounded a child before kidnapping it (884). In December 2017, several policemen were arrested after they allegedly let escape arrested criminals (885).

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 that Khost was poppy-free in 2017 (886).

Displacement

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 1 134 persons displaced from Khost (826 from Khost (Matun); 49 from Musakhel; 56 from Sabari; 70 from Sera; 21 from Tani; 112 from Terezayi) (887).

In September 2017, the director of the Department for Refugees and Repatriation in Khost was quoted stating there were 18,000 IDP families in Khost province, including those fleeing neighbouring province Paktya. In November 2017, humanitarian actors in the province reported the displacement of hundreds of families, up to 1,400 persons, from Urgun district due to armed conflict between local communities and Kuchi nomads.

In February 2018, humanitarian actors in the province reported a large number of Kuchi nomads were stranded in the province because Pakistan had closed the border. They were said to be living in open areas, without adequate shelter, because the weather hindered them from returning to their provinces of origin in Afghanistan. The border crossing was reopened in early March 2018.

According to IOM’s Displacement Tracking Matrix, 122,560 individuals or 17% of the population of Khost is either an IDP or returnee from abroad. 41,792 people, or 7% of the population, fled their homes in the years 2012-2017. Almost 20,000 people from Khost, or 3% of its population, fled abroad in the years 2012-2017.

2.18 Kunar

2.18.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Kunar

Different insurgent organisations are active in remote districts of the province; among them the Taliban, IS and also al-Qaida. Conflicts erupted between insurgent groups as well.

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘high’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least twice a week) in the districts of Nari, Dangam, Shigal Wa Sheltan, Dara-i Pech and Chapar Dara. They also have a ‘medium’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) or ‘low’ (district attacked at least once in three months) active presence in most other districts, except for Asadabad, Narang and Nurgal.

The province witnesses activities by Taliban fighters, in particular members of TTP, a Taliban grouping whose members fled into this border province in the east of Afghanistan to find refuge. suffering from attacks by the Pakistani military (898). The actual numbers of al-Qaida members, also in Kunar, are disputed (899).

It is likewise not known how many IS fighters are currently in Kunar, but the number is estimated to be several hundreds (900). The Afghan government has been accused of inflating the number of IS fighters throughout the country (901). The IS operatives in Kunar are said to be receiving training by foreigners (902). In July 2017, IS leaders had their base in Kunar in the Shigal wa Sheltan district (903). Islamic State supporters are reported to have started to actively recruit members in Kunar province, focussing in particular on the large number of jobless youths (904). However, it is still questionable whether IS actually exercises control in Kunar province (905).

ISKP-related security-relevant incidents were recorded in sources consulted by ACLED in Kunar province in the period 1 January 2017 – 31 January 2018 (906).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Kunar

Military operations are being conducted regularly in the province (907). Taliban and IS fighters, among others, were killed in the process (908). Insurgents were also killed in air strikes and drone attacks (909). Air strikes also led to the deaths of members of the Pakistan Taliban, Tehreek-e-Taliban (TTP), among them the son of Pakistan TTP head Mulla Fazullah (910).

The province has seen clashes between security forces and insurgents (911).

US and Afghan military forces regularly conducted air strikes, primarily against ISKP targets in Kunar (912). A drone strike on a TTP training camp in March 2018 killed reportedly around 20 suicide bombers in training and also the son of the movements’ leader Mullah Fazullah (913).

Pakistani security forces fire artillery shells across the border into Kunar province. The districts affected include Asmar, Shigal wa Sheltan, Marwara, Sarkano, Dangam, Nari, and Khaskunar (914); numerous families had to flee from these districts in late 2017 (915).

2.18.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

In 2017, UNAMA documented 224 civilian victims (70 deaths and 154 injured), a 43 % decrease compared to 2016. Most of the victims were casualties from ground engagement, targeted and deliberate killings, and unexploded ordnances or landmines (915). Although, according to UNAMA, the fighting in Kunar increased including due to increased infighting between insurgent groups, the number of civilian casualties from ground engagements (134 civilian casualties: 33 deaths and 101 injured) decreased by 42 %, as civilians reportedly avoided areas where these groups usually clashed with each other (916).

UNOCHA considered Kunar as one of the ‘most conflict affected’ provinces (918). In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the district Sarkani in the highest category and most of all other districts in the category below. Provincial capital Asadabad, Narang and Chawkay districts are in the middle category, and only Nurgal in the category below (919).

Kunar is among provinces with a high number of incidents of detonation of explosive remnants of war causing civilian casualties, and also among the provinces with the highest use of indirect weapons. This highlights, according to UNAMA, the link between the number of victims from explosive remnants of war, and the use of indirect weapons, such as mortars, rockets and grenades (920). For example, in February 2018, ‘a person was reportedly killed touching unexploded ordnance in Shegal Wa Sheltan District and two bystanders were injured” (921).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 102 incidents related to insurgents in Kunar province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (922).

In a drone strike targeting ISKP in October 2017, local residents reported at least 14 to 15 civilians were killed (923).

In September 2017, ISKP kidnapped and later beheaded two civilians they accused of spying for the government and foreign forces (924) and in November 2017, ISKP killed the appellant court’s executive head in Kunar province (925).

In Kunar, UNAMA reported cross-border shelling from the Pakistani side, causing displacement, the destruction of homes and livestock (926). In November 2017, local officials claimed Pakistan had fired over 1,000 missiles into all of the six districts bordering Pakistan, resulting in at least 5 civilian casualties, displacement and destruction of homes (927). In January 2018, one civilian was killed and eight others were wounded in cross-border shelling from Pakistan (928) and in February 2018, four to five civilians, among them two children, were reportedly wounded in a raid of 180 cross-border missiles in Dangam (929).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

Insecurity continued to hamper polio vaccination efforts in the province (930). In March 2018, a cases of polio was detected in Kunar (931). Food production in Kunar, was affected by natural disasters and pests, and 16.2 % of the population suffered from acute malnutrition, which, according to UNOCHA, exceeds emergency levels (932).

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) documented a 28 % increase in poppy cultivation in 2017. The main opium poppy cultivating districts were Sarkani, Noor Gal, Shigal Wa Sheltan, Watapoor and Dangam (933).

Displacement

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 19,228 persons displaced from Kunar (77 from Barkunar; 172 from Chapadara; 3 638 from Chawkay; 2 861

In November 2017, humanitarian actors reported the displacement of over 1 600 persons due to cross-border shelling and 400 persons in Chawkay district due to the ‘emergence of a new armed group’ (935). In January 2018, active conflict between ANSF and insurgents displaced around 1 000 people in Chawkay and Khas Kunar districts (936).

According to IOM’s Displacement Tracking Matrix, 159 217 individuals or 26 % of the population of Kandahar is either an IDP or returnee from abroad, of which almost 12 000 live either in tents or in the open air. 47 699 people, or 10 % of the population, fled their homes in the years 2012-2017. Over 10 000 people from Kunar, or 2 % of its population, fled abroad in the years 2012-2017 (937).

2.19 Kunduz

2.19.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Kunduz

Taliban fighters, in particular members of the Red Unit, a Taliban unit which is attacking more and more government bases, operate in Kunduz province (938). Some districts, such as the newly established districts Aqtash, Gultapa, Gulbad, are under Taliban control (939). Taliban militants are also active in parts of the Dasht-e Archi and Chardarah districts (940).

According to a BBC study of January 2018 based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘high’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least twice a week) in Dasht-e Archi and Char Dara and a ‘medium’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) and ‘low’ (district attacked at least once in three months) active presence in the rest of the province (941). In November 2017, local authorities and residents claimed 4,000 Taliban had arrived in Dasht-e Archi and controlled most of the territory, restricting the freedom of movement of residents (942).

ISKP-related security incidents were recorded in sources consulted by ACLED in the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 January 2018 (943). However, according to UNAMA, one ISKP-related incident was recorded in September 2017 in the district of Chapahar, when a one militant was killed after being kidnapped by ISKP-insurgents (944).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Kunduz

Military operations are being conducted in the province (945). Air strikes take place regularly (946). Sometimes, Taliban fighters are arrested (947). There are clashes between the insurgents and Afghan security forces (948).

The German military has a large base in Kunduz province (949).

The district of Chahar Dara was labelled by UNAMA as one of the districts in the ‘frontlines for fighting’ between insurgents and pro-government armed forces (950). For example, ANSF conducted operations in this district in September 2017 (951), in November 2017 (952) and in January 2018, ANSF launched a military operation ‘Pamir 17’ in Chahar Dara, to clear several villages from Taliban fighters (953).

In December 2017, ANSF launched a military operation called ‘Pamir 14’ into Imam Sahib (954).

2.19.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

Kunduz City briefly came under Taliban control in 2015, and once again partly in 2016 (955). In both cases it was recaptured by Afghan troops (956). In February 2018, Tolonews reported that the security situation in the province capital Kunduz City had greatly improved (957).

In 2017, UNAMA documented 377 civilian victims (93 deaths and 284 injured), a decrease of 41% compared to 2016. Most of the victims were casualties from ground engagement, aerial attacks and non-suicide IEDs (958). The reduction in civilian casualties was most notable in the number of casualties from ground engagements: 159 civilian casualties (27 deaths and 132 injured), a 54% decrease. This decrease was primarily due to the absence of any new effort to overtake the city of Kunduz, whereas there were two such efforts in 2016 (959).

UNOCHA considered Kunduz as one of the ‘most conflict affected’ provinces (960). In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 - a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the districts of Khanabad and Kunduz in the highest category, and the rest of the province in the category below (961). UNOCHA considered Kunduz as one of the four provinces of ‘very high protection concern’, defined as: ‘new IDPs, natural disaster affected people, returnees, refugees and vulnerable members of the host community’, as well as ‘non-displaced conflict affected people’. These are people living in close proximity (1 km) to explosive hazards resulting from conflict (962).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 211 incidents related to insurgents in Kunduz province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (963).

UNAMA highlights that there is a link between the number of victims from explosive remnants of war and the use of indirect weapons, such as mortars, rockets and grenades. Kunduz is among the provinces with a high number of incidents of detonation of explosive remnants of war causing civilian casualties, and also among the provinces with the highest use of indirect weapons (964). The Directorate of Mine Action Coordination (CMAC) and United Nations Mine Action Service (UNMAS) gave the following statistics in October 2017: In the period 2012-2014 there was a total of 87 civilian casualties, 14 by mines and 73 by explosive remnants of war, but in 2015-2017, a total of 262 civilian casualties were recorded: 9 by mines, 156 by explosive remnants of war and 97 by pressure-plate IEDs (PPIEDs) (965).

While ground engagements decreased in Kunduz, aerial operations caused 109 civilian casualties (43 deaths and 66 injured) in Kunduz. Especially in the district of Chahar Dara, civilians suffered from air strikes from the international military forces (966). In one air strike in Chahar Dara in November 2017, UNAMA believed at least 10 civilians were killed by US bombs, while the US claimed there were no civilian casualties in that strike (967). Later that month however, General Nicholson, commander of US forces in Afghanistan, reportedly apologized for ‘recent’ civilian casualties in Kunduz (968). According to residents, the Taliban forced them after previous air strikes to help remove the bodies of their fighters from the rubble, when the air strikes resumed in which the civilians were killed (960).

UNOCHA and press reports reported military operations, including air strikes, that lasted for more than a week in Imam Sahib, Dasht-e-Archi and Kunduz in October 2017 (970).

Without reported civilian casualties, operation ‘Pamir 14’ in Imam Sahib displaced thousands of people and reportedly residential homes were destroyed (971).

In Qala-i-Zal Taliban regularly stormed security posts. These clashes often lasted for hours and resulted casualties on both sides (972). During a Taliban raid on a village in Qala-i-Zal, three pro-government militiamen and one civilian were killed in February 2018 (973).

Civilian victims of IEDs include two boys that stepped on a PPIED in Imam Sahib district in September 2017 while pasturing their sheep (974). Four civilians were wounded when an IED targeted an ANP-vehicle in a bazaar in Kunduz City in March 2018 (975).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

Following an US air raid on the Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF) hospital in 2015, MSF opened another clinic in Kunduz City in July 2017 (976).

In January 2018, the Taliban exploded a bridge in the district of Imam Sahib, cutting off several villages and raising the price of food and transportation immediately (977).

Economic destitution and joblessness as a consequence of corruption and nepotism are said to be the main drivers for insurgent recruitment in Kunduz (978). In January 2018, UNHCR expressed their concern about child recruitment by insurgents to become fighters in different districts across Kunduz province and forced displacement of family members of ANSF personnel (979).

UNOCHA reported that 68 % of children in Kunduz ‘have been exposed to psychological distress due to loss of family and community members, and the constant risk of death and injury’ (980). Kunduz was in 2017 also one of the provinces where polio still occurred (981).

Issues with ALP and pro-government militia persist in Kunduz (982). The provincial chief of police admitted in September 2017 that 1 500 armed men linked to pro government militias were present in the province (983). Examples include an instance in October 2017, where the ALP blocked residents from a village to reach the district centre, preventing them from their livelihood activities. The reason for this blockade was that the ALP accused them, based on their ethnicity, of supporting the insurgents (984). In 2017, news agencies reported that kidnappings and robberies in Afghanistan were ‘rife’ inside Kunduz city and perpetrators were armed men linked to militias who, because of their role in fighting in favour of the state, operate in impunity (985). In March 2018, residents reported four kidnappings for ransom, of which one resulted in the death of the hostage, a 17-year-old boy (986). Also in March 2018, members of the ALP were accused of gang-rapeing two women in Dasht-e Archi (987).

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 that Kunduz was poppy-free in 2017 (988).

Displacement

ANSF operations in the province resulted in numerous families being displaced to Kunduz City (989).

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 58,951 persons displaced from Kunduz (868 from Aliabad; 11 531 from Chardarah; 5 741 from Dasht-e Archi; 14 150 from Emamsaheb; 3 483 from Khanabad; 15 632 from Kunduz; 7 546 from Qala-i Zal,) (990).

For example, in October 2017, UNOCHA reported that ‘more than 7 000’ IDPs within Imam Sahib district, around 1 000 people displaced within Dasht-e Archi, and around 2 200 people from Dasht-e Archi and Imam Sahib to Kunduz City (991). Later that month, UNOCHA reported that ‘more than 7 300 people’ had been additionally displaced from Imam Sahib, Chahar Dara and Dasht-e-Archi (992).

Joint ANSF and international military forces operations, backed by international military air support, reportedly displaced around 1 000 families from Chahar Dara in November 2017 and around 2 000 families in Imam Sahib district in December 2017 (993). There were unconfirmed reports of over 21 000 people (or more than 3 000 families) displaced in Imam Sahib and Kunduz districts and more than 7 600 people reportedly arrived in Kunduz City from Chardarah and Dasht-e Archi districts in November 2017 (994).

Clearing operations in Chahar Dara in January 2018 displaced around 2 000 families, according to government officials quoted by Pajhwok. The displaced in Kunduz City reported difficult circumstances because of the lack of shelter and the harsh winter circumstances (995). Humanitarian actors spoke about 7 000-10 000 individuals, and unverified reports of 60 000 displaced people (996). Reportedly, ‘at least 35 houses were completely destroyed or severely damaged in the airstrikes and military operations’ (997). Humanitarian actors warned that ‘the scale of damage to civilian infrastructure and homes caused by airstrikes and the subsequent mining of these areas by Non State Armed Groups prevents the possible return of displaced families, even after the airstrikes have ended’ (998).

According to IOM’s Displacement Tracking Matrix, 158 268 individuals or 13 % of the population of Kunduz is either an IDP or returnee from abroad. 69 004 people, or 7 % of the population, fled their homes in the years 2012-2017. More than half a million people, or 57 % of its population, have been IDPs but are returned (999). In the years 2015-2016, there have been repeated and partially successful attempts to take over Kunduz city in coordinated attacks from the insurgents’ side. Both the attacks and the government response often include the use of heavy weapons and air strikes. According to UNOCHA, these attacks and government response ‘have led to widespread displacement from Kunduz city in all directions’ (1000). In 2017, UNOCHA recorded 39 550 IDPs from Kunduz, the second-highest number after Nangarhar (1001). At the start of the winter, in November 2017, the Provincial Refugees and Repatriation Director warned that thousands of families were left without proper shelter and were exposed to winter-related illnesses (1002). 78 973 people from Kunduz, or 8 % of its population, fled abroad in the years 2012-2017 (1003).

2.20 Laghman

2.20.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Laghman

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘medium’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) in Alisheng and Alingar, and a low presence and activity (district attacked at least once in three months) in the rest of the province (1004). Insurgent groups, including Taliban and ISKP supporters, have been trying to expand their activities in remote parts of the province (1005). Clashes between Taliban and ISKP insurgents are reported to have spilled over, for the first time, from Nangarhar to Laghman province, with both sides sustaining heavy losses (1006). In July 2017, insurgent activities were recorded in the three districts: Alingar, Alishing and Dawlatshah (1007).

ISKP-related incidents were reported in sources consulted by ACLED in the province in the period 1 January 2017 – 31 January 2018 (1008). ANSF also targeted ISKP positions repeatedly in Laghman in this reporting period (1009).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Laghman

Military operations are being conducted in the province (1010). Air strikes are being carried out (1011) which result in the deaths of insurgents, among them Taliban leaders (1012). There are also clashes between insurgents and security forces (1013).

Military operations were reported in November and December 2017 in Alingar (1014). In March 2018, ANSF launched an operation named ‘Selab 23’ into Mehterlam and Alingar districts (1015). These operations include air strikes (1016). In February 2018, local officials claimed to have freed 30 civilians from a Taliban prison in Laghman (1017).

Laghman is host to an international military base (Forward Operating Base Gamberi) (1018).

2.20.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

In the province of Laghman attacks by insurgent groups have been on the rise in recent years (1019).

In 2017, UNAMA documented 354 civilian casualties (84 deaths and 270 injured). This represents an increase of 14% compared to 2016, contrary to the national trend in 2017.

Most of the victims were casualties from ground engagements, non-suicide IEDs, and targeted and deliberate killings (1020). Ground engagements accounted for 263 civilian casualties (48 deaths and 215 injured) in the province, a 42 % increase compared to 2016 (1021). Together with Nangarhar and Zabul, Laghman saw the highest number of civilian casualties occur from ALP ground engagements (1022).

In a UNOCHA map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017, which combines three indicators - security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the central districts (Mehterlam, Alisheng and Alingar) in the highest category of severity. The two other districts, Qarghayi and Dawlatshah, are placed in the mid-level category (1023).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 136 incidents related to insurgents in Laghman province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (1024).

Civilian casualties were reported in September 2017, when a roadside bomb killed two civilians in their truck in Mehterlam (1025) and when Taliban fired rockets at the Kabul Jalalabad highway in Qarghayi district injured six civilians (1026). In a bomb attack in Mehterlam city in December 2017, a civilian was killed and six or seven children injured (1027). In another report on the same incident, authorities were quoted claiming that three children were killed and six others wounded in the explosion (1028). IEDs targeting ANSF were also reported in October in Qarghayi (1029).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services
In 2017, health facilities were closed temporarily in Laghman province because of threats by anti-government groupings (1030), depriving 500 000 people from access to healthcare (1031). Fighting in Alishang district, displaced around thousand individuals and, together with illegal checkpoints, reportedly impeded humanitarian access (1032).

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) documented a 64 % increase in poppy cultivation in the province in 2017. Increases were documented in all six districts (1033).

Displacement
UNOCHA collected, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, data on 9 449 persons displaced from Laghman (4 847 from Alingar; 2 149 from Alishang; 126 from Dawlatshah; 2 327 from Mehtarlam/Bad Pash) (1034).

According to UNOCHA field reports from September-October 2017, clashes between insurgents and ANSF displaced thousands people in Alisheng, and hundreds more fled towards Kabul (1035).

UNOCHA described ‘active fighting between armed groups, threats and intimidation’ as the reasons for the displacement of nearly 1 500 people from Alingar in December 2017 (1036). One month later, another 700 people fled intimidation by insurgents from Alingar district, according to UNOCHA field reporting (1037). In February 2018, fighting, threats and intimidation again displaced thousands in and from Laghman district (1038). Armed clashes and subsequent clearing operations displaced more than 3 000 later in February 2018 in Alingar and Mehterlam districts (1039).

According to IOM’s Displacement Tracking Matrix, 130 491 individuals, or 22 % of the Laghman population is either an IDP or returnee from abroad. Of that number, approximately 9 384 of them live in tents or outdoors. According to IOM’s displacement monitoring matrix, 88 788 people, or one in five of its residents, fled their homes in the years 2012-2017. Over 20 000 people from Laghman, or 5 % of its population, fled abroad in the years 2012-2017 (1040).

2.21 Logar
2.21.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent in Logar
According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘high’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least twice a week) in most of the province, except for Azra (‘medium’, districts attacked at least three times a month) and Khoshi (‘low’; district attacked at least once in three months) (1041).

Taliban fighters are active in several districts of the province (1042). The Haqqani network is also alleged to have a presence in parts of the province and to be launching attacks in Logar (1043). In March 2017, the ISKP allegedly tried to recruit young men in Logar province (1044). In November 2017, the Provincial Governor claimed that 11 Chechen nationals were arrested, together with their families. They were believed to have come from neighbouring Nangarhar, where ISKP has activities (1045).

ISKP-related incidents (skirmishes) were reported in sources consulted by ACLED in the province in the period 1 January 2017 – 31 January 2018 (1046).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Logar

Military operations are being conducted regularly in the province (1047); Taliban leaders and members of the Haqqani network were killed (1048). Air strikes are being carried out as well (1049), killing insurgents (1050). There are clashes between the insurgents and Afghan security forces (1051).

2.21.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

As Logar is close to the outer districts of Kabul city, it was the scene of heavy fighting between the Taliban and security forces (1052). In 2017, UNAMA documented 148 civilian casualties (67 deaths and 81 injured). This represents a decrease of 35 % compared to 2016. Most of the victims were casualties from ground engagements, targeted and deliberate killings and aerial attacks (1053). While fighting in Logar increased in 2017, according to UNAMA, there were less civilian casualties from ground engagements: 35 civilian casualties (11 deaths and 24 injured), a 66 % decrease compared to 2016 (1054).

In a UNOCHA map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 which combines three indicators - security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the central districts of Logar (Pul-e Alam, Baraki Barak and Charkh) in the second-highest category of severity, and Mohammad Agha in the category below. Azra, Khoshi and Kharwar are in the lowest two categories.

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 140 incidents related to insurgents in Logar province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website.

Examples of incidents involving civilian casualties that occurred in the reporting period include:

- Three civilians were killed and three were wounded when Taliban opened fire on an ALP vehicle in a bazaar in Mohammad Agha in September 2017.
- During a battle between ANSF and insurgents in December 2017, a mortar struck a market and killed three civilians.
- In November 2017, a suicide bomber attempted to target the Provincial Governor’s convoy as it passed a bazaar in the capital Pul-e Alam. The explosion wounded 11 civilians instead.
- In October 2017, a boy and two men were killed and another was wounded when they struck an unexploded mortar round while cutting grass with sickles.

In an incident of targeting, Taliban beheaded an ALP-member in January 2018 and reportedly put his head on a stake with a note threatening to do the same to other ALP members unless they quit.

Local officials told Pajhwok that four civilians were wounded in an air strike in Charkh district in late February 2018.

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

Logar has been ‘poppy-free’ for three consecutive years (2015-2017). Conservative views on gender roles and insecurity is keeping many girls away from school in Logar, where only 7% of the girls finish high school. In certain areas of the province, the Taliban are trying to convey their religious views in schools.

Displacement

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 3,168 persons displaced from Logar (1,622 from Baraki Barak; 1,058 from Charkh; 133 from Kharwar; 224 from Khoshi; 89 from Mohammad Agha; 42 from Pul-e Alam) (\textsuperscript{1066}).

In November and December 2017, humanitarian actors reported the arrival of 225 IDP families who fled to Pul-e Alam and Mohammad Agha districts after fleeing ‘insecurity and continuous conflicts’ between ANSF and insurgents in insecure districts of Logar province, as well as Wardak and Kunar (\textsuperscript{1067}). In January 2018, another 1,050 individuals were displaced from Baraki Barak and Charkh to Pul-e Alam (as well as from Paktia and Khost provinces) and Mohammad Agha districts. They were said to be fleeing ‘military operations, insecurity, intimidation, and economic problems’ as explained by a representative of the DoRR (\textsuperscript{1068}).

According to IOM’s Displacement Tracking Matrix, 147,544 individuals, or 27 \% of the population in Logar is either an IDP or returnee from abroad. Of that number, approximately 18,000 live in the Shairak settlement in Pul-e Alam. According to IOM’s displacement monitoring matrix, 112,285 people, or 28 \% of its residents, fled their homes in the years 2012-2017. Over 43,000 people from Logar, or 11 \% of its population, fled abroad in the years 2012-2017. That is the highest proportion after Farah (\textsuperscript{1069}).

2.22 Nangarhar

2.22.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Nangarhar

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘high’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least twice a week) in the western districts of Hisarak, Sherzad and Khogyani, and the district of Batikot in the centre of the province. Most other districts have a ‘medium’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) to ‘low’ Taliban activity and presence (districts attacked at least once in three months), except for Goshta district (\textsuperscript{1070}).

Since 2014, there have been more and more reports on stepped-up IS activities in some remote parts of the province, which also includes Achin district (\textsuperscript{1071}). ISKP demonstrated strong resistance, even though Afghan and international forces carried out joint operations. The group launched several attacks against civilians and military targets, in particular in Kabul and Nangarhar (\textsuperscript{1072}).

\textsuperscript{(1072)} UNSC, The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security, as of February 27th, 27 February 2018 (url), p. 5.
In Nangarhar, the Taliban and ISKP fight for control of natural mines and territory, in particular in the Tora Bora region where goods are being smuggled from and to Pakistan. The southern and south-eastern districts saw an increasing fragmentation of the insurgency since 2007 and particularly since 2012, with Taliban shadow governors struggling to control their combatants and impose clear chains of command. Nonetheless, as atrocities committed by ISKP having reached a peak, the Taliban gained more influence. It became less easy for ISKP to recruit people. Armed conflicts between the Taliban and ISKP occurred, with a view to territorial gains. In one case, Taliban militants killed a former commander for allegedly having ties with ISKP.

A number of Taliban and ISKP militants joined the peace process in Nangarhar.

ISKP-related incidents (acts of violence against civilians, clashes with armed forces, acts of violence) were reported in sources complied by ACLED in Nangarhar province in the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 January 2018.

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Nangarhar

Military operations are being regularly conducted in the province. Air strikes are also being carried out. These operations sometimes involve the killing of insurgents.

In January 2018, for example, operations were conducted in the district of Heska Mena/Deh Bala against ISKP, including air strikes. In March 2018, joint ANSF and international military force operations were conducted in Chaparhar district.

For 2017, UNAMA named specifically Deh Bala district as one of the three frontline districts in Afghanistan where international military air strikes took place.

2.22.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

In 2017 UNAMA documented 862 civilian casualties (344 deaths and 518 injured). This represents an increase of 1% compared to 2016, contrary to the national trends in 2017. This is the third highest number, after Kabul and Helmand. Most of the victims were casualties from ground engagements, non-suicide IEDs, and targeted and deliberate killings (1087). The increase was driven by suicide and complex attacks and other types of incidents involving IEDs (1088). While fighting in Nangarhar increased in 2017, according to UNAMA, there were less civilian casualties from ground engagements: 227 civilian casualties (53 deaths and 174 injured), a 12% decrease compared to 2016 (1089).

UNOCHA considered Nangarhar as one of the ‘most conflict affected’ provinces (1090). In a UNOCHA map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017, combining three indicators - security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the districts in the south and the centre of the province in the highest category of severity (Achin, Deh Bala, Pachieragam, Khogiyani, and Chaparhar). Hisarak, Surkhand, Kot, Shinwar, Muhmand Dara and Lulpur were in the category below the highest. Sherzad, Rodat, Batikot Behsud and Jalalabad were in the middle category, and all other districts in the lower two categories (1091).

UNOCHA considered Nangarhar as one of the four provinces where persons exhibiting ‘very high protection concerns’ are located, defined as having a high number of: ‘new IDPs, natural disaster affected people, returnees, refugees and vulnerable members of the host community’, as well as ‘non-displaced conflict affected people’. These are people living in close proximity (1 km) to explosive hazards resulting from conflict (1092).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 740 incidents related to insurgents in Nangarhar province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (1093).

The Taliban and ISKP continued competing over territorial control in the province (1094), and both were targeted by ANSF and international military forces (1095). In Khogiyani, fighting between Taliban and ISKP in the months of October and November 2017 displaced tens of thousands (see displacement), and several civilians were killed in the crossfire (1096). NRC also reported that civilians were tortured for helping the adversaries when territory changed.

hands (\textsuperscript{1097}). In January 2018, for example, residents of the district of Heska Mena/Deh Bala claimed that several civilians, including women and children, were killed and wounded in operations against ISKP. Local officials blamed the civilian casualties on the fact that ISKP fighters hide in civilian homes that are subsequently targeted by air strikes (\textsuperscript{1098}). In March 2018, there were again reports about civilian casualties during joint ANSF and international military force operations in Chaparhar district (\textsuperscript{1099}).

Taliban and ISKP militants regularly attack local officials and security forces in the province (\textsuperscript{1100}). Ground engagements involving ISKP caused 22 civilian casualties in Nangarhar in 2017 (\textsuperscript{1101}). Two incidents of targeted killing, 18 incidents involving the abduction of 81 civilians causing eight deaths and three injured (\textsuperscript{1102}). In November 2017, two remote controlled IEDs placed by ISKP killed two deminers and injured another (\textsuperscript{1103}).

Some examples of IED incidents involving civilian casualties include:

- The detonation of remote-controlled IED (RCIED) targeting an ANBP convoy, killing a civilian bystander and injuring four children and women (\textsuperscript{1104}).
- The detonation of an RCIED when a child touched its wiring in Achin in December 2017, killing a young girl, wounding three other girls and a woman (\textsuperscript{1105}).
- A suicide bomber targeted the crowd attending the funeral of a former governor, killing at least 17 persons and wounding 13 more in Heska Mena (Deh Bala) district in December 2017 (\textsuperscript{1106}).
- An explosion during a cricket match killed four cricketeers and a civilian in February 2018 (\textsuperscript{1107}).
- Three civilian were wounded by a Taliban-planted bomb in Chaparhar district in March 2018 (\textsuperscript{1108}).

A magnetic bomb attached to a fuel tanker went off on the ring road of Jalalabad in Behsud district. In the incident two people were killed, several were wounded and 30 shops were burnt down (1109).

Examples of targeted killings include the killing of an imam by the Taliban in Khogiyani in November 2017, on the accusation of supporting the government (1110). Similarly, a mullah was killed by ISKP in Chaparhar district in September 2017, for ‘encouraging his congregation to support the government’ (1111). In November 2017, ISKP reportedly beheaded 15 of its own members in Achin district (1112). In Shirzad district, the Taliban executed two civilians in December 2017, for unknown reasons according to press reports (1113). In February 2018, the bodies of nine civilians, including three elders, were found in a mass grave in Achin. They were part of a group of 15 that had been abducted by ISKP 18 months before (1114).

Aerial operation in Nangarhar caused 94 civilian casualties (57 deaths and 37 injured) in 2017. Specifically Deh Bala district in Nangarhar was named as one of the three frontline districts in Afghanistan where civilians suffered most from international military air strikes (1115).

UNAMA stated the vast majority of the civilian casualties from search operations were caused in Nangarhar and Kandahar. Of the 13 incidents with civilian casualties in Nagarhar in 2017, ‘12 search operations involving NDS Special Forces resulted in 38 civilian casualties (28 deaths and 10 injured). In one case, NDS Special Forces entered a home in Mohmand Dara district and shot dead all seven civilian men inside. The victims, all from the same family, had been displaced from Achin district due to heavy fighting’ (1116). In another example, three men were killed by NDS personnel during a search operation in September 2017. A fourth man was wounded. The men had assumed the plain-clothed NDS personnel were burglars (1117).

Nangarhar is among provinces with a high number of incidents of detonation of explosive remnants of war causing civilian casualties, and also among the provinces with the highest use of indirect weapons. This highlights, according to UNAMA, the link between the number of victims from explosive remnants of war, and the use of indirect weapons, such as mortars, rockets and grenades (1118).

In September 2017, two boys were killed and three others injured by cross-border shelling from Pakistan into Nazyan district, while also displacing many families. Pakistani forces also

Security Situation in Jalalabad

During a presentation at an EASO conference in November 2017, an analyst employed by an international organisation in Afghanistan, who follows the security situation throughout the country very closely but who wished to remain anonymous, stated that Jalalabad city marked a ‘major security deterioration’ specifically since August 2017, caused by an increase in major crimes, including the targeting of businessmen, industrialists and doctors, an influx of insurgents escaping operations by ANSF and international military forces, and an ongoing power struggle (1120).

In a complex attack on the office of Save the Children in January 2018 in Jalalabad, five civilians were killed and 21 injured. UNAMA detailed that those killed were four Save the Children staff and one shopkeeper; those injured were five Save the Children staff and six children while the remaining were civilians living or working in the area (1121). The attack was claimed by ISKP (1122).

Other examples of incidents involving civilian casualties in Jalalabad include:

- One person was reportedly killed and eight others injured when a bomb exploded inside a vegetable shop in September 2017 (1123).
- At least six civilians, including a woman and a child, were reportedly killed and 13 others wounded when a suicide bomber on a motorbike detonated his explosives outside a football stadium shortly after the end of a rally in support of President Ashraf Ghani in December 2017 (1124).
- In February 2018, at least one civilian was killed and three others were wounded in an explosion inside the city (1125).
- In another attack targeting a political rally by Hezb-e Islami leader Gulbuddin Hekmatyar, at least three were killed and eight wounded in Jalalabad in March 2018 (1126).

A number of targeted attacks happened inside the city during the reporting period.

- An employee of the Pakistani Consulate in the city was attacked and shot in the head five times by gunmen on a motorcycle while shopping near his home (1127).
- In December 2017, two NDS personnel, including reportedly the Director of the Jalalabad Intelligence Unit, were killed in two bomb attacks claimed by ISKP. Ten others, including civilians, were wounded in the explosions (1128).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

UNAMA reported one incident of parallel justice punishments attributed to ISKP in Nangarhar in 2017 (1131).

In eastern Afghanistan, the increase in opium poppy cultivation was especially high in Nangarhar province a plus of 32 % in the aggregate, even though 204 hectares were eradicated. The main opium poppy cultivating districts are Khogyani, Chaparhar, Batikot, Darah-e Nur, Hesarak, Lal Pur, Mohmand Dara, Rodat, Shinwari and Sherzad (1132).

Nangarhar is one of the places where cases of the ‘wild polio’ virus were reported (1133).

Displacement

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 128 781 persons displaced from Nangarhar (1 834 from Achin; 10 847 from Chaparhar; 2 559 from Dehbala; 33 from Durbaba; 56 from Goshta; 182 from Hesarak; 89 300 from Khogyani; 182 from Kot; 7 490 from Lalpur; 333 from Mohmand Dara; 14 473 from Pachيرagam; 84 from Rodat; 11 from Sherzad; 1 380 from Shinwar; 17 from Surkhrod) (1134).

Parts of Nangarhar have been a battleground for years, creating large-scale displacements. At the same time Nangarhar also hosts hundreds of thousands of returnees from Pakistan (1135). UNOCHA claimed, at the end of 2017, that almost one million people lived in informal settlements in Nangarhar, primarily in and around Jalalabad, and that this number had doubled in seven months’ time (1136). According to UNOCHA, ‘the districts of Achin, Dehbala, Durbaba, and Kot have experienced significant depopulation’ due to ‘threat of repeated or intensified fighting’. The population movements were concentrated in and around Jalalabad (1137). Due to a combination of high numbers of IDPs and high numbers of returnees, the number of informal settlements in Nangarhar province rose from 29 to 53 in six months’ time in 2017, and its population doubled to almost a million in less than seven months. In 2017, one in three residents of Nangarhar was either IDP or a returnee. Such a rise has a profound impact, according to UNOCHA, ‘overloading health facilities, schools, depressing labour wages and increasing rents’ (1138).

According to IOM’s Displacement Tracking Matrix, 808 902 individuals, or 34 % of the population in Nangarhar is either an IDP or returnee from abroad, which is nationwide both the highest number in absolute terms as proportionally. Of that number, approximately 37,000 live in the Chamtala settlement in Khogyani and over 33,000 in the Khalis Family settlement near Jalalabad, the second and third biggest IDP settlements in Afghanistan. According to IOM’s displacement monitoring matrix, 252,285 people, or 16% of its residents, fled their homes in the years 2012-2017. Over 32,000 people from Nangarhar, or 2% of its population, fled abroad in the years 2012-2017 (1139).

In 2017, displacement in Nangarhar continued to be very high. Nangarhar was the province with the highest conflict-induced displacement in 2017. Of the more than 448,000 people displaced by conflict in Afghanistan in 2017, UNOCHA recorded 123,538 IDPs in Nangarhar, followed by Kunduz with 39,550 and Badghis with 26,659 (1140).

In Khogyani, fighting in October and November displaced 51,600 people: ‘33,000 displaced people have found shelter scattered across Khogyani District, 9,800 have fled to Pachir Wa Agam and 9,600 to Surkh Rod districts. Some 4,500 have sheltered in Behsud District and approximately 1,100 in Jalalabad City’ according to UNOCHA. ‘Although some have found shelter with relatives, others are erecting makeshift shelters in open areas’ (1141).

2.23 Nimroz

2.23.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Nimroz

Taliban fighters are active in Nimroz province (1142). According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘medium’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) in Kasht Rod, and a ‘low’ activity/presence (district attacked at least once in three months) in neighbouring Chakhansur (1143). According to an article on the Institute for War and Peace Reporting website however, large parts of Nimroz province are under Taliban control, which fosters smuggling (1144).

No ISKP-related incidents were reported in the sources consulted by ACLED in the province in the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 January 2018 (1145).

Military operations are being conducted in the province (1146). Air strikes are being carried out, killing insurgents (1147). There are clashes between the insurgents and Afghan security forces (1148).

2.23.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

In 2017 UNAMA documented 99 civilian casualties (34 deaths and 65 injured). This represents a decrease of 24 % compared to 2016. Most of the victims were casualties from ground engagements, targeted and deliberate killings and non-suicide IEDs (1149).

In a UNOCHA map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017, combining three indicators - security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the Khashrod / Dularam district in the north-eastern corner of the province in the second-highest category. The rest of the province is in the lowest category, except for the capital, Zaranj, which is placed in the second-lowest category (1150).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 48 incidents related to insurgents in Nimroz province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (1151).

Anti-government elements are active on the highway between Helmand and Nimroz. Insurgents are responsible for abductions, set up checkpoints and carry out direct attacks (1152). Targeted roadside IED attacks in Kasht Rod district in September 2017 killed the commander of the highway police and three patrolling policemen, and wounded two others a few days later (1153). Other attacks in the same area were the killing of the Kasht Rod district chief in November 2017 (1154); a policeman killed and two others wounded in February 2018 in Kasht Rod (1155); and in November 2017, 12 soldiers were killed in an attack on their check post on the main road in Kasht Rod (1156).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services
In December 2017 and January 2018, there were reports of Taliban checkpoints on the roads, used to tax passengers and goods (1157).

A September 2017 article by Foreign Policy magazine report from the province, Nimroz is described as a lawless drug-smuggling hub (1158). Local residents and public representatives complained about a surge in drug addictions, robberies and burglaries in February 2018. A local official stated crime had risen by 50 % compared to the previous year, while other officials denied this and claimed crime had actually decreased (1159). In September 2017, a trader was kidnapped and subsequently killed in the provincial capital Zaranj (1160). The alleged kidnappers were arrested and sentenced to death three month later (1161). In the case of kidnapping a nine-year-old boy, the kidnappers were also sentenced to death a few days before (1162). In January 2018, Iranian security personnel claimed to have freed an Iranian national kidnapped in Iran and held captive in Nimroz (1163).

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 that Nimroz was one of the country’s major poppy cultivating provinces. In 2017, opium poppy cultivation in Nimroz province more than doubled to 11 466 hectares. Poppy cultivation occurred primarily in Kash Rod and Chahr Burjak districts. 14 hectares of poppy fields were rededicated in 2017 (1164). Nimroz is said to be a strategic region for drug trafficking as the province shares a 235 km border with Iran, is located north of Pakistan and also borders on Helmand, the province where half of all Afghan opium is produced (1165).

According to a United Nations report, the highest rate of methamphetamine treatments was recorded in treatment centres in Kunduz and Nimroz (1166). The province has seen the number of drug addicts rise in recent years; among those affected are also Afghans returning from foreign countries, mainly from Iran (1167). Zaranj City has two rehabilitation centres, for female and male drug addicts respectively (1168).

Work on the Afghan section of the TAPI line was inaugurated in mid-March 2018. This 1 800 km natural gas pipeline is to supply Turkmenistan, Afghanistan, Pakistan and India with 33 billion cubic metres of Turkmen natural gas for 30 years. The pipeline is to run across five provinces in the south of the country — Herat, Farah, Helmand, Nimroz, and Kandahar, thus through an area with a strong Taliban presence. However, the Taliban declared their support for TAPI, calling it an ‘important project’ for the country (1169). In exchange of jobs in the TAPI project, 70 Taliban have indicated they were prepared to join in the peace process (1170). Thousands of security forces have been deployed to ensure security for the TAPI project (1171).

Displacement
UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 11 persons displaced from Nimroz (from Khashrod / Dularam) (1172).

According to IOM’s Displacement Tracking Matrix, 76,980 individuals, or 31% of the population in Nangarhar is either an IDP or returnee from abroad, which is nationwide the second-highest proportion, after Nangarhar. According to IOM’s displacement monitoring matrix, 10,750 people, or 6% of its residents, fled their homes in the years 2012-2017. Over 15,000 people from Nimroz, or 9% of its population, fled abroad in the years 2012-2017 (1173). In Nimroz is one of the two major border crossings to Iran, the Milak crossing. When flooding caused the closure of the Islam Qala border crossing in Herat province, 195,000 returnees came through Milak, ‘overwhelming response capacity in Nimroz’ (1174).

2.24 Nuristan
2.24.1 Actors in the conflict
Insurgent groups in Nuristan
The province, having a long tradition of Salafi activism, attracts several militant groups inspired by this form of Sunnite Islam (1175). Insurgents are active in various districts. Taliban insurgents as well as other groups operate in the province (1176).

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘high’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least twice a week) in the eastern districts Barg-e Matal and Kamdesh, and a ‘medium’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) to ‘low’ activity/presence (district attacked at least once in three months) in the rest of the province, except for the provincial capital Porun (1177).

ISKP is said to be active in Nuristan (1178) and to have also recruited new members (1179). The Province Governor, however, denied any ISKP activity in the province; a fatwa against the group is alleged to have been pronounced by religious scholars in the province (1180). Nevertheless, lashes take place between the Taliban and ISKP supporters in Nuristan (1181).

ISKP-related incidents were recorded in the sources consulted by ACLED in the province in the period 1 January 2017 – 31 January 2018 along the border with Kunar (1182). The leader of the Pakistani Tehrik-e Taliban (TTP), Mullah Fazlullah, is believed to have fled to Nuristan with his supporters and to be continuing his operations from there (1183).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Nuristan

Military operations are being conducted in the province (1184), also taking the form of air strikes (1185) and resulting in the death of insurgents (1186). There are clashes between the insurgents and Afghan security forces (1187). The inhabitants of Parun, the capital of the province, joined forces in October 2017 in a bid to ensure peace and to stop the insurgents with the help of the Afghan security forces (1188).

2.24.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

According to the representative of an international organisation contacted by EASO for this report, due to limited access to information and the lack of international community and IMF/ANSF presence throughout the province, an accurate assessment of the security situation is difficult; it is believed that incidents are significantly underreported. As a result of inaccessibility, mountainous terrain, and inadequate ANSF presence, the security situation remains volatile in Nuristan (1189).

In 2017, UNAMA documented 41 civilian casualties (11 deaths and 30 injured). This represents an increase of 14 % compared to 2016, contrary to the national trend. Most of the victims were casualties from ground engagement, non-suicide IEDs, and targeted and deliberate killings (1190). According to UNAMA, the increase was mainly driven by suicide and complex attacks and other types of incidents involving IEDs (1191).

Kamdesh, bordering Pakistan and Kunar province, in the second-highest category and Waygal in the category below. All other districts are in the lowest two categories (1192).

Parun is considered to be a safe district; the majority of its population are Nuristani. The homogeneity of the local population helps prevent the destabilisation of their communities by outsiders. However, neighbouring districts Barg-e Matal, Kamdesh and Waygal are described as experiencing ‘relentless fighting’, causing residents in those areas to be displaced to Parun (1193).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 71 incidents related to insurgents in Nuristan province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (1194).

In September 2017, the Taliban launched a major attack of more than 300 fighters who attacked the district centre of Barg-e Matal but were repulsed by the ANA (1195). According to local officials ‘one child was killed and three other civilians were wounded in the Taliban gunfire. Two mosques and eight civilian houses were also destroyed’ (1196).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

In 2017, Nuristan lost its opium-free status; 121 hectares of opium were cultivated in Nurgaram and Mandol districts (1197).

Displacement

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 747 persons displaced from Nuristan (21 from Barg-e Matal; 118 from Kamdesh; 217 from Mandol; 32 from Nurgeram; 9 from Poruns; 350 from Waygal) (1198).

2.25 Paktia/Paktya

2.25.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgents are active in several districts of the province (1199). Insurgents include members of the Taliban (1200) and of al-Qaida (1201). But the Haqqani network is also operational in Paktia.
province (1202), which is said to be the birthplace of the Haqqani network (1203). The province is described, by analyst Bill Roggio of the Long War Journal, as a ‘bastion’ of the Haqqani Network (1204). In November 2017, the village elders of Paktia province agreed to act as mediators between the Afghan government and the Haqqani network (1205).

In October 2017, UNOCHA reported ongoing armed clashes in Janikhel district (1206), which previously had fallen into Taliban hands for two weeks in July-August 2017 (1207). In late March 2018, fighting was again reported in Janikhel (1208), a district of special importance to, among others, the Haqqani network as its geographical position affords many advantages to those able to control it (1209).

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘high’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least twice a week) in Zurmat, Gardez, Janikhel, Dand Wa Patan and Alikhel or Jaji district. In the remaining districts, the Taliban have a ‘low’ (district attacked at least once in three months) or ‘medium’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) presence and activity (1210).

ISKP-related incidents (skirmishes) were reported in sources compiles by ACLED along the border to Khost province in the period 1 January 2017 – 31 January 2018 (1211).

Pro-Government forces and military operations in Paktia

Military operations are being conducted in the province (1212), also taking the form of air strikes (1213) and resulting in the deaths of insurgents (1214). There are also clashes between insurgents and security forces (1215).

In December 2017, in a briefing to humanitarian actors in the province, the Afghanistan National Disaster Management Authority reported that the number of military operations in Zurmat district has increased, and that this could lead to further displacement (1216).

2.25.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

In 2017, UNAMA documented 491 civilian casualties (116 deaths and 375 injured). This represents an increase of 154 % compared to 2016. Most of the victims were casualties from suicide or complex attacks, targeted and deliberate killings and ground engagements (1219). According to UNAMA, the increase was mainly driven by suicide and complex attacks and other types of incidents involving IEDs (1220). In Paktya province, UNAMA documented four suicide and complex attacks in 2017, resulting in 255 civilian casualties (51 deaths and 204 injured), compared to none of these types of attacks in 2016 (1221).

In a UNOCHA map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017, which combines three indicators - security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places Janikhel, Alikhel/Jaji, SayedKaram/Mirzaka, provincial capital Gardez, Shawak and Zurmat districts in the second-highest category and most of all other districts in the middle category (1222). Thomas Ruttig, Co-Director of the Afghanistan Analysts Network (AAN), described the province as one that ‘appeared to be otherwise calm’ in November 2017, except for fighting around Janikhel district centre and an occasional air strike (1223).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 54 incidents related to insurgents in Paktia province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (1224).

The Taliban conducted a significant complex suicide attack on a police training facility in Gardez city on 17 October 2017. According to AAN’s reporting, ‘the total number of casualties, including attackers and civilians, was estimated to be over 80 dead and around 200 wounded’ (1225).

According to UNAMA, Paktya was one of the three provinces marking an increase in targeted killings in 2017 (1226). In January 2018, a government official was killed by a magnetic IED attached to his car in Gardez city (1227). In January 2018, an IED exploded in Gardez city, killing one civilian and injuring a second (1228).

In March 2018, there were reports of fighting with the Taliban in Zurmat, and a Taliban attack on a check post in Zurmat (1229) which resulted in the killing of seven police officers (1230).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services
In one incident involving criminal behaviour by the Afghan Local Police, several ALP officers broke into a house in an attempted robbery in Zurmat in September 2017. However, the robbery resulted in the ALP killing the homeowner, a teacher who was home at the time; two of his family members were also injured (1231). UNAMA reports that the ANP arrested the four ALP officers and their case was in process in the primary court (1232).

UNOCHA reported that a health facility in Janikhel was occupied by ANSF, despite negotiations led by department of Public Health (1233). After ANSF retook the district centre in November 2017, the soldiers vacated the health facility and healthcare workers were able to return to the clinic and resume operations (1234).

UNAMA reported that it received 2017 reports that the Khost Protection Force in Paktya seized personal belongings and weapons from civilians, detained and questioned people, and transferred some to NDS while releasing others (see Khost for more details) (1235).

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 that Paktya was poppy-free in 2017 (1236).

In December 2017, residents complained that many roads in and around Gardez are permanently closed for security reasons. This forces residents to take secondary ‘dust’ roads, on which the claim to lose a lot of time, are often robbed and cannot transport patients to hospitals (1237).

Displacement
UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 9,517 persons displaced from Paktya (483 from Ahmadaba; 1 351 from Alikhel (Jaji); 63 from Chamkani; 4 543 from Janikhel; 266 from Lija Ahmad Khel / Laja Mangel; 1 289 from Sayedkaram / Mirzaka; 49 from Shawak; 112 from Zadran; 1 361 from Zurmat) (1228).

In September 2017, UNOCHA reported the arrival of more than 2 600 people displaced by a ‘volatile security situation’ in Janikhel district (1230). In December 2017, local officials reported that 700 families or 4 900 individuals had arrived in Gardez from Zurmat, Jani Khil, Laja Ahmad Khi and Ali Khil (Jaji) districts (1240).

According to IOM’s Displacement Tracking Matrix, 92 693 individuals, or 14 % of the population in Paktiya is either an IDP or returnee from abroad. According to IOM’s displacement monitoring matrix, 42 517 people, or 8 % of its residents, fled their homes in the years 2012-2017. Over 28 000 people from Paktiya, or 5 % of its population, fled abroad in the years 2012-2017 (1241).

2.26 Paktika

2.26.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Paktika

Insurgents belonging to the Taliban, the Haqqani network, al-Qaida and other anti-government groups, such as the Tehrik-e Taliban (TTP), are active in Paktika (1242). The Haqqani network is also operational in Paktika (1243).

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban fully control 14 districts nationwide, of which one in Paktika: Dila district. Further, they have a ‘high’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least twice a week) in Gomal, Janikhel, Turwo, Omna, Sarobi, Sarrawzah, Urgun, Sharan, Naka, and Ziruk. In the remaining districts, they have a ‘medium’ presence and activity (districts attacked at least three times a month), except for Zarghunshahr, where they supposedly have only a ‘low’ presence and activity (district attacked at least once in three months) (1244).

In August 2017, the government denied that the district of Gomal had fallen in Taliban hands, claiming to have ‘tactically retreated’ from the DAC (1245). The Taliban later spread a video showing they were in control of the DAC (1246).

ISKP-related incidents were reported in sources consulted by ACLED along the border with Ghazni in the period 1 January 2017 – 31 January 2018 (1247).

Military operations are being conducted regularly in the province (1248). Air strikes are also being carried out (1249), resulting in the killing of insurgents (1250).

2.26.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

In 2017, UNAMA documented 158 civilian casualties (62 deaths and 96 injured). This represents a decrease of 5% compared to 2016. Most of the victims were casualties from non-suicide IEDs, targeted and deliberate killings and ground engagements (1251).

In a UNOCHA map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017, which combines three indicators - security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places Urgun district in the second-highest category and most of all other districts in the middle category (1252).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 76 incidents related to insurgents in Paktika province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (1253).

At times, insurgents launch attacks, including coordinated attacks and suicide attacks (1254). For example in September 2017, humanitarian actors in the province reported 25 days of continuous clashes in Gomal district. The fighting left the District Administrative Centre (DAC) compound destroyed and ANSF had to move to the nearby border battalion (1255).

Clashes between security forces and insurgents were reported on several other occasions (1256).

In a shooting incident between policemen in the capital Sharan, two policemen and a civilian were killed, while 21 others were wounded (1257). Residents of Gyan district claimed that six civilians were killed and four injured, in fighting between insurgents and ANSF in December 2017, a claim ANSF dismissed (1258). In February, two civilians and a policeman were killed, and six to twelve wounded in the explosion of an IED on a motorbike on a market in Yahyakhel district (1259).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

Tolonews reported in November 2017 that due to insecurity government officials from Sarrawzah, Gyan and Nakah district do not enter the district anymore and have set up office in neighbouring districts, or in the provincial capital. Further, the Taliban closed the roads Wormamay, Turwo/Tarwah and Wazakhaw districts (1260). The Paktika-Ghazni highway links the both provinces; late in March 2018, the road was reopened, following a one-week blockade due to demonstrations against the worsening security situation. The Governor of the province promised to take the necessary steps (1261).

In September 2017, in clashes in Gomal district, a basic health clinic was damaged (1262). In March 2018, a health clinic was damaged during conflict in Nika district, stopping its operations, serving a community of around 40 000 people (1263).

The Taliban are said to have blocked anti-polio vaccination campaigns in the province, warning residents not to vaccinate their children (1264). In Dila district, insurgents are said to have taken away the money residents received from humanitarian actors to rebuild their houses and burnt the money, warning everybody to stop receiving any assistance from the government (1265). In January 2018, Pajhwok reported that 39 schools remained closed in the province due to ‘Taliban hurdles’ and opposing tribal elders (1266).

The province has no female doctor and because of a lack of antenatal and neonatal care, maternal mortality rates are high. Conservative attitudes, however, are said to be gradually changing (1267). In some districts, e.g. in Barmal, Afghan inhabitants carry Pakistani identity cards (1268).

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 that Pakitka was poppy-free in 2017 (1269).

Displacement

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 2,464 persons displaced from Paktika (28 from Bermel; 126 from Dila; 707 from Gomal; 28 from Gyan; 84 from Matakhan; 238 from Naka; 63 from Sarobi; 35 from Sharan; 1 078 from Urgun; 77 from Wazakhah) (1270).

In September 2017, humanitarian actors in the province reported around 100 families displaced due to clashes in Gomal district to Urgun, Sarobi and Sharan (1271). Other reports state the violence displaced 500 families (1272). ‘Heavy armed clashes’ between insurgents and ANSF reportedly led 800 more into displacement in October 2017 (1273). In November 2017, 220 new IDPs were reported in Sharan, coming from Gayan, Gomal and Waza Khwa districts. The displacement was caused by ‘continues conflict between ANSF and Taliban, threats and shortages of drinking water’ according to the Head of Department of Refugees and Repatriation (1274). UNOCHA reported in March 2018 that more than 1 200 people reportedly arrived in Sharana from Urgun and Mata Khan districts (1275).

Paktika, sharing a long border with Pakistan, hosts around 30,000 Pakistani refugees who fled military operations in North and South Waziristan (1276).

2.27.1 Actors in the conflict

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban has no presence or activity in any of the province’s seven districts (1277).

According to one source, Panjshir is regarded as the last major pro-government stronghold in Afghanistan (1278).

Panjshir was the only province in Afghanistan where UNAMA did not document a single civilian casualty in 2017 (1279). The incident happened when a criminal resisted arrest and threw a hand grenade at the ANSF (1283).

In a UNOCHA map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017, which combines three indicators - security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the whole province in the lowest category (1284).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 1 incident in Panjshir province was found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (1285).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

In 2017, Panjshir was one of the opium-free provinces of Afghanistan (1286).

Displacement

No conflict-induced internal displacement was reported by UNOCHA for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018 (1287).

2.28.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Parwan

Taliban militants are active in remote districts of Parwan province (1288). In November 2017, the districts of Seyagerd/Ghorband and Shinwari were considered most vulnerable in terms of security (1289).

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘medium’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) in Ghorband district. Further they have a ‘low active presence’ (district attacked at least once in three months) in Shinwari, Salang, Jabalussaraj, Bagram and Koh-e Safi (1290).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Parwan

Early in September 2017, ANSF launched a ground operation against insurgents in Jabalussaraj district, reportedly backed by drone strikes (1292). Military operations were further also being conducted on several occasions in the province (1293); with Taliban fighters being killed (1294) and weapons being confiscated (1295). Air strikes are carried out as well (1296).

There are clashes between security forces and Taliban (1297).

2.28.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

Reports from ‘restive’ districts of Parwan province speak of roadside bombs, suicide attacks, targeted/deliberate killings and other attacks, sparking ANSF operations (1298). Taliban insurgents sometimes launch attacks on security forces in some parts of the province (1299).

According to UNAMA, there were 77 civilian casualties in Parwan in 2017: 20 persons were killed and 57 injured due mainly due to unexploded ordnances and landmines, followed by targeted and deliberate killings and ground engagements. This represents a decrease of 31 %, compared to 2016 (1300).

In a UNOCHA map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017, which combines three indicators - security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the district Seyagerd/Ghorband, in the second-highest category, and Shinwari and Bagram in the middle category. All other districts are in the lowest two categories (1301).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 54 incidents related to insurgents in Parwan province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (1302).

In September 2017, US airplanes dropped leaflets over Parwan province that were deemed offensive to Islam. The Taliban subsequently claimed that a suicide attack carried out near the Bagram base, that injured between four to six civilians, was in response to this ‘insult’ to Islam (\textsuperscript{1303}). One week later, a vehicle-borne suicide attack targeting a foreign military convoy wounded six international soldiers and three civilians (\textsuperscript{1304}). At the end of September 2017, the Taliban launched a coordinated attack on several security posts in Seyagerd/Ghorband district, overrunning several of them. The subsequent fighting over territory lasted for several days and displaced several thousand civilians (see \textit{Displacement} (\textsuperscript{1305}). According to some reports, Taliban shelling killed seven civilians, including two girls, and injured seven other civilians. The Taliban were also said to have tortured residents and looted their houses according to local media sources (\textsuperscript{1306}).

In November 2017 in the capital, Chahrikar, a magnetic IED attached to a fuel truck detonated, killing eight civilians and wounded around 25 people. The detonation happened when a passenger bus was passing by the truck. No group claimed responsibility (\textsuperscript{1307}). Xinhua News Agency reported that 15 people were killed and 30 more wounded in the attack (\textsuperscript{1308}).

Examples of targeted killings include:

- In November 2017, government officials were targeted by a roadside bomb, killing the Deputy Head of the Education Department Parwan and wounding the Head of Department (\textsuperscript{1309})
- In February 2018, five NDS personnel were killed when a gunman opened fire on their car in Bagram district (\textsuperscript{1310}).

Parwan is one of the opium free provinces of Afghanistan (\textsuperscript{1311}).

\textbf{Displacement}

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 6 632 persons displaced from Parwan (6 531 from Seyagerd/Ghorband; 101 from Shinwari) (\textsuperscript{1312}).

UNOCHA reported that ‘heavy armed clashes’ in Shinwari and Seyagerd/Ghorband districts in September 2017 displaced around 1,750 people to villages within the districts (\textsuperscript{1313}). According to the Deputy Provincial Governor, reporting to humanitarian actors, the conflict occurred in Seyagerd/Ghorband end of September 2017 and took place between insurgents and ANSF. Reportedly, 95 % of about 1,500 – 2,000 families living in the area were displaced to Chahrikar and Bagram districts and ‘many of them’ also left for Kabul. One official stated that there were also ‘reports about casualties and destruction of houses’ (\textsuperscript{1314}). In March 2018, the Parwan DoRR stated that 350 families had arrived in Chahrikar, Jabalussaraj and Bagram districts from insecure districts in 5 other provinces, as well as from insecure districts of Samangan and the Ghorband valley (1315).

2.29 Samangan

2.29.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Samangan
Taliban fighters as well as members of ISKP and the Islamic Movement of Uzbekistan (IMU) were active in some districts (1316). Chardarah district in Kunduz is important for the Taliban as it gives them access to Samangan province; according to one source, fighting the Taliban in Kunduz would also have repercussions in Samangan (1317).

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘low ‘active and physical presence’ (district attacked at least once in three months) in all districts, except for the northern districts of Hazrat-e Sultan and Feroznakhchir (1318).

ISKP-related incidents were reported by sources consulted by ACLED in the north of Samangan between 1 January 2017 and 31 January 2018 (1319).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Samangan
Military operations have been conducted in Samangan (1320). This involved insurgents being arrested (1321); explosives being found and confiscated (1322) and Taliban leaders being killed (1323).

2.29.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General
The Taliban and members of other groupings among them – have tried in recent years to extend their activities to several districts in the province (1324). In September 2017, the security situation in the province reportedly began to deteriorate along with rising violence in the northern provinces of the country (1325).

In 2017, UNAMA documented 38 civilian casualties (14 deaths and 24 injured). This represents a 28% decrease compared to 2016. Most of the victims were casualties from unexploded ordnance or landmines, followed by ground engagements and non-suicide IEDs (1326).

For example, two civilians were killed and four more injured in the Dara-i Suf-e Payin district during a shooting incident between two rival groups of ‘uprising forces’ (1327).

In a UNOCHA map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 combining three indicators - security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the district Dara-e Suf-e Payin, in the second-highest category and Ruy-e Duab and Aybak in the middle category. All other districts are in the lowest two categories (1328).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 35 incidents related to insurgents in Samangan province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (1329).

In September 2017, the Taliban attacked the house of an ALP commander and reconciled former Taliban member; the Taliban killed this person’s father and injured the commander and a woman in the house (1330).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

In 2017, the Taliban were accused of kidnapping truck drivers employed by an important coalmine, and burning their trucks, apparently for not paying taxes to the Taliban (1331). Furthermore, the Taliban were also accused of kidnapping four employees of a construction company in Aybak in February 2018 (1332).

Without specifying or giving examples, UNAMA mentioned the abusive behaviour of pro-government armed groups in Samangan (1333). In 2017, Samangan lost its opium-free status (1334); farmers are growing opium poppy in the province (1335).

In early 2018, Abdulkarim Khaddam had to step down from Province Governor of Samangan in the wake of a political conflict within the government (1336); the new governor is Abdul Latif Ibrahimi (1337).

UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 3,840 displaced persons from Samangan (623 from Aybak; 784 from Dara-i Suf-e Bala; 1 343 from Dara-i Suf-e Payin; 105 from Khuram Wa Sarbagh; 985 from Ruy-e Duab) (1338).

2.30 Sar-e Pul/ Sar-e Pol
2.30.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Sar-e Pul
Armed anti-government elements are active in some districts, launching attacks (1339). Taliban fighters are active in the province (1340) and are recruiting new supporters (1341). According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban fully control 14 districts nationwide, of which one in Sar-e Pul: Kohestanat. Further, they have a ‘medium’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) in Sayad and a ‘low’ presence (district attacked at least once in three months) in Sancharak, Sozmaqala and Gosfand districts (1342).

ISKP is gaining ground in some districts of the province (1343). Foreign fighters are also reported to have joined ISKP in northern Afghanistan, also in Sar-e Pul province (1344). According to Obaid Ali, an analyst specialising in the insurgency in the north of Afghanistan, a small group of Taliban fighters temporarily joined the self-identified ISKP fighters in Jawzjan in 2017, but after a few months re-established connections with the Taliban (to conduct the joint operation and massacre in Mirza Olang, Sayad district, in August 2017) (1345). Afghan Lawmakers stated in December 2017 that ISKP was actively recruiting in Sar-e Pul (1346).

The Islamic Movement of Uzbekistan (IMU) is active in the province and runs a training camp in Sar-e Pul (1347); what is more, the leader of the movement is said to be recruiting for ISKP in the province (1348).

ISKP-related incidents (acts of violence against civilians and remote violence) were reported in sources consulted by ACLED in Sar-e Pul province in the period 1 January 2017 – 31 January 2018 (1349).

In some cases, the insurgents also join the peace process in Sar-e Pul (\textsuperscript{1350}).

\textbf{(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Sar-e Pul}

Military operations are being conducted in the province (\textsuperscript{1351}), resulting in arrests (\textsuperscript{1352}) and deaths of insurgents (\textsuperscript{1353}). Air strikes are being carried out as well (\textsuperscript{1354}), with insurgents being killed in the process (\textsuperscript{1355}). There are clashes between insurgents and security forces (\textsuperscript{1356}).

In October 2017, local officials claimed that Mirza Olang fell for a second time this year to the Taliban, and was subsequently retaken after ‘large-scale military’ operations, including air strikes (\textsuperscript{1357}).

\textbf{2.30.2 Recent security trends and impact on the conflict}

\textbf{General}

The security situation in Sar-e Pul province has reportedly worsened in recent years after Taliban militants and other anti-government groups launched operations in certain districts (\textsuperscript{1358}).

In 2017, UNAMA documented 108 civilian victims of conflict (67 deaths and 41 injured). This represents an 11% increase compared to 2016, contrary to the national trend. Most of the victims were casualties from targeted and deliberate killings, ground engagements and unexploded ordnance or landmines (\textsuperscript{1359}). According to UNAMA, the increase in casualties was mainly driven by suicide and complex attacks and other types of incidents involving IEDs (\textsuperscript{1360}).

In a UNOCHA map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017, which combines three indicators - security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the northern district Sar-e Pul, Sayad and Sancharak in the second-highest category, and Sozmaqala in the middle category. The other districts - Kohestanat, Balkhab and Gosfandi - were in the lower two categories (\textsuperscript{1361}).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 67 incidents related to insurgents in Sar-e Pul province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (1362).

In Sancharak, heavy fighting between insurgents and ANSF was reported in October 2017 (1363). In December 2017, two pro-government militias started fighting each other and one allegedly switched sides to the insurgency, after which the Taliban seized a part of the district. This led to ANSF operations to retake the territory lost. There were reports of several civilian casualties, including women and children, as the Taliban allegedly hid in residential homes (1364).

Three targeted killings in Sar-e Pul were attributed to self-identified ISKP fighters by UNAMA (1365).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

In September 2017, WFP’s ‘rapid assessment’ of food security in Sayyad stated that due to insecurity, access to markets and food supply were ‘severely constrained,’ resulting in rising food prices and increased food insecurity, especially in rural areas (1366).

Crime was reported to have decreased by 40% in the first eight months of the Solar year 1396 (March-November 2017). A local official linked crime to the presence of ‘illegal armed groups’ said to outnumber the ANSF two to one (1367).

The UNODC stated in November 2017 that Sar-e Pul lost its poppy-free status in 2013. Since then the province area under opium poppy cultivation continuously expanded. In 2017, opium poppy cultivation in Sar-e Pul province was estimated at 3,550 hectares, more than double the area in 2016. The main opium cultivating districts were Sayyad and Sar-e Pul districts (1368).

Displacement

UNOCHA collected, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, data on 7,483 persons displaced from Sar-e Pul (84 from Balkh; 42 from Gosfandi; 466 from Kohestanat; 7,483 from Sancharak; 1,214 from Sar-e Pul; 8,043 from Sayyad; 171 from Sozmaqala) (1369).

In September 2017, UNOCHA reported more than 2,000 people displaced from Sayyad and Sar-e Pul districts to Sar-e Pul city (1370). In December 2017, fighting in Sancharak reportedly displaced 2,000 families or 5,000 to 7,000 individuals, depending on the source (1371).

2.31 Takhar

2.31.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Takhar

Taliban insurgents are active in certain districts of the province (1372). The Taliban announced that Darqad district was their central base in the area (1373). On 40 hectares (100 acres) of land in Darqad district, the Taliban have built a township featuring housing, health centres and shops (1374). The township was known under the name Omari Town (1375). According to reports in February 2018, control of the region had been taken back by the Afghan security forces (1376).

In October 2017, Khaama Press stated that insurgent groups had stepped up activities in the province in recent years. Takhar province borders on some troubled provinces in northern Afghanistan; insurgents travel through Takhar to other provinces to launch operations there (1377). In February and March 2018, insurgent activities and clashes between Afghan security forces and rebels are frequently recorded in Takhar (1378). At times, Afghan security forces come under attack in the province (1379).

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘low’ (district attacked at least once in three months) ‘active and physical presence’ in Yangi Qala, Darqad, Khwaja Ghar and Eshkashem districts (1380).

No ISKP-related incidents were reported sources consulted by ACLED in Takhar province in the period 1 January 2017 – 31 January 2018 (1381).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Takhar

Military operations are being conducted in the province \(^{1382}\); sometimes high-ranking Taliban leaders are killed \(^{1383}\) and insurgents are arrested and killed \(^{1384}\). Air strikes are being carried out as well, with Taliban being killed in the process \(^{1385}\). The province sees armed clashes between security forces and insurgents \(^{1386}\).

Air strikes were used in an attack on Taliban hideouts in Yangi Qala district in February 2018, leading to the killing of eight Taliban and their commander and injury of ten other fighters \(^{1387}\).

The NDS carried out operations against the Taliban in Namakab district, capturing a Taliban commander who was transferring RPG rockets to the group \(^{1388}\). In December, insurgents from the Taliban took over three police check posts and four villages in Dasht-e Qala and the Bagh-e Paen area following a retreat by security forces; the Taliban claimed three police were killed and two wounded in the attack \(^{1389}\). Clearing operations by NDS also occurred in Qamgozar area in February 2018, leading to the killing of five Taliban and a commander \(^{1390}\).

Further clearing operations ongoing in February 2018 were in Darqad, Khwaja Bahauddin, Dast-e Qala and Yangi Qala, with reportedly dozens of insurgents killed, injured and captured \(^{1391}\).

2.31.2 Recent security trends and impact on the population

General

In 2017, UNAMA documented 98 civilian victims (36 deaths and 62 injured). This represents an 8 % decrease compared to 2016. Most of the victims were casualties from ground engagement, followed by unexploded ordnance or landmines and aerial attacks \(^{1392}\).

In a map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017, a combination of three indicators - security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the districts in the north of the province, Darqad and Khwaja Bahauddin, in the second-highest category.

Two districts bordering Kunduz, Khwaja Ghar and Eshkashem were in the middle category, and all the other districts in the lower two categories (1393). Pajhwok news also identified the most insecure districts as of February 2018 as Darqad and Khwaja Bahauddin, as well as mentioning Dasti Qala and Yangi Qala (1394). Sources describe Takhar as formerly a relatively calm area, though Taliban activity has reportedly increased and now occurs ‘often’, including coordinated attacks (1395) and ‘heavy clashes’ (1396).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 74 incidents related to insurgents in Takhar province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (1397). According to Pajhwok Afghan News, reporting in September 2017, Afghan forces were fighting directly with the Taliban in various parts of Takhar, including in Darqad, Yangi Qala, Khwaja Bahauddin, Khwaja Ghar and Eshkashem districts (1398). As of late September, Khwaja Ghar is reportedly experiencing instability due to ongoing confrontations between ALP and the Taliban. Three ALP were killed and two wounded in Taliban clashes on 26 September (1399). In March 2018, the Taliban attacked an army post in Khwaja Ghar, killing seven to ten soldiers. ALP sent to reinforce the army were ambushed, and another six to ten ALP personnel were killed. Several more were wounded (1400).

In October 2017, a bomb attack on a hotel in Qinar Bazarr, Eshkashem district killed several people and wounded another 7 or 8 people. No group claimed responsibility (1401).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

The Taliban reportedly attacked a vehicle carrying health workers in Khwaja Pasti in September (1402).

Pajhwok also reported that civilians complained of social and security problems caused by illegal armed groups that were killing local people and looting in the areas around Taloqan and throughout districts of Takhar, due to the lack of government control over such groups (1403). According to the Provincial Governor’s Spokesman, there are 2,700 police officers for all of Takhar province, leading to an inadequate presence of police across more Takhar was mentioned by UNAMA as one of the provinces where ALP caused civilian casualties (1405).

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 that Takhar was poppy-free in 2017 (1406).

Displacement
UNOCHA collected, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, data on 13 654 persons displaced from Takhar (42 from Baharak; 7 from Chahab; 21 from Chal; 9 002 from Darqad; 249 from Eshkashem; 3 983 from Khwaja Bahauddin; 7 from Rostaq; 343 from Yangi Qala) (1407).

According to UNOCHA, there were reports that insecurity in some parts of Takhar in early November 2017 led to instances of displacement (1408). In January 2018, UNOCHA reported that there were 557 conflict-related IDP families across different parts of Takhar, and that 158 of them were particularly vulnerable (1409). In February 2018, UNOCHA meeting minutes from Takhar noted that military operations had displaced a number of families from Darqad and Yangi Qala district centres (1410).

According to IOM’s Displacement Tracking Matrix, 164,625 individuals, or 14 % of the population in Takhar is either an IDP or returnee from abroad. According to IOM’s displacement monitoring matrix, 30 795 people, or 3 % of its residents, fled their homes in the years 2012-2017. Over 87 000 people from Takhar, or 9 % of its population, fled abroad in the years 2012-2017 (1411).

2.32 Uruzgan
2.32.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Uruzgan

Uruzgan is one of the provinces of the country where opium production and, as a consequence, Taliban presence has increased in the course of 2017 (1412). The Taliban are reported to be active in the Chora, Charchino and Tirinkot districts (1413). Considered as one of the most contested provinces in the south of the country, Uruzgan is said to be the birthplace of Mullah Omar, the founder of the Taliban and has an important symbolic status for all parties to the conflict (1414).

According to the US SIGAR report from October 2017, 5 out of 6 districts in Uruzgan province are under insurgent control or influence (1415). According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘high’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least twice a week) in Khas Uruzgan, Chora/Chinarto and Shahid-e Hassas districts. Further, they have a ‘medium’ presence (districts attacked at least three times a month) in Tirinkot and Dherawud districts (1416).

At the end of November 2017, the Taliban reportedly launched operations attempting to capture the provincial capital of Tirinkot, as well as attempting to overrun Chora, Charchino, Gizab districts (1417).

There were conflicting reports about whether the Taliban successfully attacked and temporarily took over the district centre of Shahid-e Hassas (1418) following multiple ‘large-scale operations’ in Uruzgan between September and December (1419). The Taliban did reportedly capture some police check posts during the attacks, which were later retaken (1420).

In March 2018, local officials claimed the district centre of Khas Uruzgan was under siege for more than a month by then, and that it was on the verge of collapsing entirely to the Taliban (1421). Later that month, security officials reported that 15 ANA soldiers surrendered to the Taliban (1422).

There were reports in sources consulted by ACLED of clashes between ISKP and the armed forces in the south and north-east of Uruzgan in the period 1 January 2017 - 31 January 2018 (1423).

(Pro-)Government groups and military operations in Uruzgan

Both the Afghan security forces and the Afghan army persevere with anti-terrorist operations in the province to curb insurgent and terrorist activity (1424). Armed anti-government forces are fought in particular in the troubled districts of the province (1425).

Operations are being carried out in the Chora, Charchino districts and in the capital, Tirinkot (1426); these involve insurgents – and sometimes high-ranking leaders – being killed (1427). Air strikes are being conducted as well (1428). Clashes between security forces and insurgents are also regularly reported (1427).

On 6 September 2017, 40 Taliban insurgents were reportedly killed in a security forces operation outside Tirinkot city, while 5 others were killed in raids in Khas Uruzgan district (1430). Air strikes killed 18 insurgents and two Taliban commanders in Gagrak and Yaklinga areas of Tirinkot city on 17 September 2017 (1431). On 20 September, the Afghan forces conducted air and ground force clearing operations in areas of Tirinkot city (Sola, Garamab, and Nachin) that reportedly killed 25 insurgents and injured 11 others (1432). In Tirinkot, in the areas of Sola, Chapa Khak, and Kabutar Khana, ongoing ground operations on 23 December 2017 by Afghan security forces reportedly left 54 insurgents dead and as many injured following gun battles in the clearing operation (1433). Air strikes in December 2017 in Sabzak, in Tirinkot, killed 8 insurgents and a local commander, according to local news (1434).

The inhabitants of the Tirinkot, Khas Uruzgan, Charchino and Dehrawud districts took up arms late in January 2018 (1435).

2.32.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

Uruzgan is reportedly one of 11 provinces with the highest number of security incidents (1436). In 2017, UNAMA indicated that, Uruzgan was among the nine provinces with the highest civilian casualty rates (1437). Throughout 2017, UNAMA documented 639 civilian casualties in Uruzgan (344 deaths and 518 injured), marking a 26 % decrease from 2016. The leading causes of civilian casualties in the province were ground engagements, non-suicide IEDs and aerial attacks (1438). In a UNOCHA map depicting ‘conflict severity’ in 2017, a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement are used to categorise provinces and their districts. UNOCHA places two out of Uruzgan’s five districts (Tirin Kot and Chora/Chinarto) in the highest category of ‘severity’ and the remaining three (Dehrawud, Shahid-e Hassas, Khas Uruzgan) in the second-highest category (1439).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 154 incidents related to insurgents in Uruzgan province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (1440).

Ground engagements were the main cause of civilian casualties in Uruzgan in 2017 and Uruzgan was among the 5 provinces with the highest casualties from ground fighting. However, UNAMA also noted that there was a decrease in casualty rates, particularly in Uruzgan, due to a reduction in large-scale operations inside major population centres and reduced harm by Afghan forces (1441). There were 332 casualties from ground engagements in Uruzgan in 2017 (36 deaths and 296 injured), a drop of 36% compared to 2016 (1442). Also, UNAMA recorded two incidents of search operations that caused civilian casualties in Uruzgan throughout the year (1443). Examples of incidents involving civilian casualties include a mortar which struck a house during an ANSF operation in Tirinkot, killing two children and wounding another child and their father (1444). In February 2018, several clashes in different districts around the province, resulted in people being killed, including insurgents, policemen and civilians. In Tirinkot, three members of one family - a man, a woman and a baby - were killed by the Taliban (1445).

On 1 April 2018, civilians, most of them displaced, protested continued operations against the Taliban in their province. They claimed that two years of operations against the Taliban had not delivered security, to the contrary, many civilians were killed and their residences, farms and orchards have been destroyed, according to the protestors (1446).

On 30 September, the Taliban and security forces engaged in heavy clashes near the Chora district centre, leading to the capture of 7 security check posts (1447). The attack was carried out by 30 insurgents and left 26 members of the security forces dead (1448). The Taliban reportedly planted explosives along the roads leading into the district centre (1449). The Lower House of Parliament drew attention to the attack when MPs claimed that the security forces in Chora had requested backup but did not receive it, and complained that the Taliban have greater numbers than the security forces in the area (1450).

In February 2018, the Taliban closed the road connecting the province to Kandahar, and subsequently abducted 30 passengers, including 19 policemen. Two days later, nine were released, but 21 suspected of being ANSF personnel, remained in Taliban custody (1451).

According to UNAMA, there were 505 civilian casualties caused by pressure-plate IEDs across the country in 2017, and of those, about one fifth, or 102 casualties, were in Uruzgan province (causing 27 deaths and 75 injured). This was a 9% increase over 2016 for this type of attack (1452).

Local media reported on incidents of civilians killed and injured by explosions and improvised devices in the reporting period. Nine civilians and four security force members were injured on 3 September 2017 in separate attacks by a motorcycle-VBIED and a grenade attack in two separate explosions in Uruzgan (1453). A roadside bomb on 11 November 2017 caused injuries to several security force members and pro-government militiamen in Tirinkot city (1454). In December 2017, a five-member gang responsible for planting IEDs and carrying out targeted killings were arrested in Tirinkot and admitted to killing eight security officials and using IEDs to target government vehicles (1455).

Uruzgan was among the five provinces with the highest casualties caused by air strikes. Aerial attacks were the third most common cause of civilian casualties in Uruzgan, causing 58 civilian casualties throughout the year (13 deaths and 45 injured) (1456).

UNAMA indicates that in 2017 Uruzgan was among the ten provinces with the highest number of civilian casualties caused by explosive remnants of war (1457). For example, in November 2017, seven children in Chora district were injured when they were playing with an unexploded mortar that detonated (1458).

Impact of the conflict on services and law and order

UNAMA stated that due to threats by insurgents throughout Afghanistan, 147 health facilities were forced to temporarily close in 2017, with 46 of those closures happening Uruzgan, across all districts (1459). As an illustration of the impact, a UNOCHA field report from September 2017 noted that at the time, 40 closures of health facilities in Uruzgan had deprived an estimated 420,000 people of access to health and medical services (1460). In December, UNOCHA reported that 30 facilities re-opened after three months of closure (1461). Uruzgan is one of the few places where polio-cases were still being reported in 2017 (1462). According to Uruzgan Governor’s Spokesman speaking in October 2017, at least 80 schools were closed due to recent conflicts in the province (1463). Insecurity and road blockades are hindering reconstruction programmes, but also, local strongmen hinder reconstruction projects by... demanding a share of the money invested before projects can take off in the area under their influence (1464). The Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission claimed that in the past 16 years, due to insecurity, no judge or prosecutor has ever been available in any of the districts of Uruzgan outside the provincial capital Tirinkot. This led people in rural areas to entirely rely on Taliban-provided justice (1465).

In two incidents involving police conduct, civilians were killed: In February 2018, a verbal dispute between a police officer and civilians ended with the policeman shooting one person dead and wounding five more. Later, the police officer was arrested (1466). In another verbal clash between local and national policemen, resulting in a firefight, a woman was killed inside her house by a stray bullet (1467).

The UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) stated in November 2017 that Uruzgan was one of the ‘main poppy cultivating provinces’ of Afghanistan: ‘a fourth of the arable land was under opium poppy cultivation in 2017’. The surface of land cultivated with poppies increased by 39% compared to 2016. The main opium poppy cultivating districts were Tirinkot, Dehrawud and Shahid-e Hassas (1468). The government plans pistachio fields to be established in Kandahar, Uruzgan and Helmand to offer local farmers an alternative to producing opium. Uruzgan province is set to receive 140 such fields (1469).

Displacement

UNOCHA collected, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, data on 24,915 persons displaced from Uruzgan (7,236 from Chora/Chinarto; 128 from Dehrawud; 4,615 from Khas Uruzgan; 12,936 from Tirinkot) (1470).

The US SIGAR reports from both October 2017 and January 2018 state that roughly 6% of Uruzgan’s population has been displaced due to conflict; among the highest rates in the country (1471). According to UNOCHA, reporting in mid-September 2017, Uruzgan had the fourth highest total number of IDPs (17,062) in the country (1472).

During the reporting period for this EASO report, UNOCHA noted a number of displacement instances in Uruzgan. In early September 2017, military operations caused displacement of 2,954 IDPs in Uruzgan (1473). Also in mid-September, 13,000 IDPs reportedly arrived in Tirinkot from several other areas of the province; 7,700 people were reportedly displaced from Shahwalikot and Nesh to Kandahar City (1474). In October of 2017, heavy fighting near the district centre of Chora caused the displacement of over 2,000 people (1475).

2.33 Wardak/ Maidan Wardak

2.33.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Wardak

Armed anti-government insurgents are active in various districts (\(^{1476}\)). These include the Taliban (\(^{1477}\)) and the Haqqani network, which, according to some sources, had headquarters in a part of Wardak province (\(^{1478}\)).

Armed anti-government insurgents are especially active districts along the highway which links Kabul to the southern and south-eastern provinces (\(^{1479}\)).

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban have a ‘high’ ‘active and physical presence’ (districts attacked at least twice a week) in Jalrez, Nerkh and Jaghatu districts and a medium presence (districts attacked at least three times a month) in Sayadabad, Chack and Daymirdad districts. No Taliban presence or activity was reported in both Behsud districts (\(^{1480}\)).

No ISKP-related incidents were reported in sources consulted by ACLED in the province in the period 1 January 2017 – 31 January 2018 (\(^{1481}\)).

(Pro-)Government forces and military operations in Wardak

Large-scale military operations are being conducted in Wardak province (\(^{1482}\)); this involves insurgents being killed and arrested (\(^{1483}\)). Leaders of such groupings were also killed in such operations. Air strikes are being carried out as well, with insurgents being killed in the process.

The police are putting in a lot of effort into demining the highway through Wardak, as this southern section connects nine provinces with the capital Kabul.

There are clashes between the Taliban and Afghan security forces.

Air strikes against the Taliban occurred in Maydan Wardak, for instance, on 10 September 2017, several senior Taliban leaders were targeted and killed in a series of air strikes conducted in the Salmon Fars area of the province.

Media sources report that Afghan forces were conducting operations around the city of Maydan Shahr, including Deh Afghanan and Qala-i Ziyarat at the end of October 2017, leading raids against the Taliban, killing and injuring a number of fighters.

Local news reported that, at the end of November, an operation called Khalid-96 was launched by the Afghan police, army and special forces in Wardak, in at least 10 villages of Jalrez district, leading to the killing of between 24 and 25 militants, including a half dozen commanders. Also in late November 2017, security forces reportedly killed a top Haqqani network leader in Wardak in security sweeps. He was one of more than 20 insurgents killed in the raid in Nerkh district.

Sayadabad was the site of further security operations in early December, which resulted in the discovery of a Taliban medical facility, used to treat insurgents from the area and surrounding provinces; an unspecified number of insurgents and commanders were reportedly killed in the operations. On 24 December 2017, 15 Taliban insurgents who had been destroying electricity towers in the province were killed in military operations in Sayadabad. In January 2018, Afghan forces raided a Taliban hideout, also in Sayadabad, killing 10 insurgents, including 2 commanders.

2.33.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

According to the 2017 UNAMA annual report, 42 civilians were killed and 41 injured in Wardak due mainly to ground engagements, targeted and deliberate killings and aerial attacks. This marks a 35 percent decrease compared to 2016 (1497).

UNOCHA maps Afghanistan’s ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 by a combination of three indicators - security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement - UNOCHA places the two districts of Sayadabad and Jalrez in the second-highest category of severity, followed by the four districts of Jaghatu, Chak, Daymirdad and Nerkh, which are listed in the mid-level category of conflict severity. The remaining districts have a low level of conflict severity: the western districts of Markaz-e Behsud, Hesa-i Awal-e Behsud and the eastern district of Maydan Shahr (1498).

UNOCHA reported that at the end of October 2017 heavy fighting was ongoing in the districts of Chak, Jaghato, Nerkh and Jalrez (1499). Between 6 and 11 November, UNOCHA noted that heavy fighting continued in these districts and prevented humanitarian assistance partners from accessing the area (1500). The fighting was reportedly between the Taliban and ANSF, and the Taliban fighting with HIG (1501).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 74 incidents related to insurgents in Wardak province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (1502).

A Taliban commander and four insurgents were reportedly killed in Nerkh district on 7 September 2017 following operations sparked by Taliban attacks on security check posts (1503).

In March 2018, two children were killed in the crossfire during a clash between insurgents and ANSF in Sayadabad district. Eight more were wounded in this incident (1504). Also in March 2018, five members of the Haqqani Network, including two notorious commanders, were arrested and one was killed during a night raid in Sayedabad (1505). Later in March 2018, residents of Sayadabad claimed four civilians were killed during a night raid on their village carried out by Afghan security forces. Three more were wounded. Local authorities claimed that two civilians and three Taliban were killed (1506).

In the week of February 12-18, UNOCHA reported that armed clashes between armed opposition groups occurred in Nerh and Jalrez districts (1507).

In October 2017, local media reported that the Taliban fired mortars into Maydan Shahr city, killing 2 civilians and injuring two others (1508).

On 18 October 2017, the Afghanistan Times reported that the Taliban conducted a coordinated attack in Jaghato district centre, detonating a car bomb and then launching an attack; however, security forces apparently repelled it and killed 30 Taliban fighters (1509).

In September, a suicide bomber who was attempting to target a security forces convoy in Maydan Wardak, blew himself up, killing himself and injuring another person (1510). In early November 2017, 15 Taliban attackers blew up a suicide bomb at the gate of an ANP base in Dasht-e Top and then tried to storm the base, but were all killed by the police (1511).

According to the New York Times, reporting on 21 September 2017, the Taliban killed the police chief in Jaghato that month by detonating an IED, and have used roadside bombs to kill three security chiefs in Jaghato within the space of one month (1512).

In another example, on 23 November 2017, Afghan forces used rockets and air strikes to attack and kill roughly 20 Taliban insurgents who were sheltering in a religious school in the ‘central eastern province of Wardak’; no civilians were harmed (1513). However, Pajhwok reported that the operation occurred in Nerh, and that 34 militants were killed in the attack, while the Taliban claimed that those killed were madrassa students (1514).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services
As of November 2017, Wardak province had been completely opium-free, at least since 2006. In 2005, 106 hectares of poppy cultivation were still documented in Daymirdad (1515).

Displacement
UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 3,759 persons displaced from Wardak (315 from Chak; 322 from Jaghato; 315 from Jalrez; 1 694 from Nerh; 1 113 from Sayabad) (1516).

According to UNOCHA, between 23 and 29 October 2017, over 1 000 displaced people arrived in Maydan Shahr, following ‘heavy armed clashes’ in Wardak and Paktika provinces. UNOCHA states that at that time the fighting was ‘ongoing’ and that additional displacement was anticipated (1517). The following week, in early November, UNOCHA reported that ongoing conflict had caused families to be displaced to Maydan Shahr, and additionally that 500 families from Wardak and Nagarhar had been displaced to Kabul city due to ongoing heavy clashes in those provinces (1518). UNOCHA noted that, at that time, the conflict was limiting access for humanitarian assistance into the area (1519). Armed clashes between opposition groups in February resulted in over 2,100 people being displaced from Nerkh and Jalrez districts to the provincial capital of Wardak Province (1520). In the last week of February, UNOCHA reported that 4,500 people had been internally displaced to the provincial capital (1521) and to Dasht-e Top area of Sayadabad district as a result of insecurity and armed clashes (1522).

In the final week of February 2018, UNOCHA reported insecurity and armed clashes between pro-government militia groups and insurgents in the province, and that local officials were predicting displacements into March 2018 as a result (1523). In the same period, UNOCHA also reported that HIG and the Taliban were fighting each other in Nerkh, Chak, Sayadabad and Jalrez, causing IDPs (1524).

2.34 Zabul

2.34.1 Actors in the conflict

Insurgent groups in Zabul

Taliban and other insurgent groups are active in certain districts (1525). Taliban and al-Qa’ida members (1526) as well as ISKP supporters are reported to be active in the province (1527). The two districts of Khak-e Afghan and Daychopan are among those that see an ISKP and al-Qa’ida presence (1528). According to a February 2018 article by Pajhwok Afghan News, the Head of the Zabul Provincial Council claimed that there were active ISKP centres in four districts of Zabul: Daychopan, Khak-e Afghan, Naw Bahar and Arghandab (1529). However, in the same article, the Zabul Governor contradicted this claim, stating that there were no Daesh militants in the province, and that only Khak Afghan district (also called Khak-e Afghan or Kakar district) of the province was under Taliban control. He added that security problems in the province were created by Pakistani and Iranian intelligence groups (1530).

According to a BBC study of January 2018, based on research conducted between 23 August and 21 November 2017, the Taliban fully control 14 districts nationwide, of which one in Zabul: Kakar district. Further, they have a ‘low’ (district attacked at least once in three months) or ‘medium’ (districts attacked at least three times a month) ‘active and physical presence’ in the rest of the province, except for provincial capital Qalat.\(^{(1531)}\)

ISKP-related incidents were reported in sources consulted by ACLED in Zabul province in the period 1 January 2017 – 31 January 2018\(^{(1532)}\).

Government forces and military operations in Zabul

Military operations are being conducted in the province\(^{(1533)}\), resulting in the killing of insurgents\(^{(1534)}\) and sometimes also of their leaders\(^{(1535)}\).

There are clashes between security forces and Taliban\(^{(1536)}\).

For example, in October 2017, the MoD carried out Zabul security operations in Mizan and Shahjoy districts which inflicted ‘heavy casualties’ on the Taliban, leading to the killing of 23 and injury of 28 fighters\(^{(1537)}\). Also, in December 2017, the Afghan government reported that its special forces, police, army, and NATO Resolute Support forces had conducted operations in Zabul, Ghazni and Paktia, reportedly leading to the killing of a senior Al-Qaeda leader\(^{(1538)}\).

In January 2017, the Ministry of Defence carried out security operations in 9 provinces, including Arghandab district of Zabul, and killed 8 ‘terrorists’ and destroyed their hideouts\(^{(1539)}\). In late February 2018, security forces conducted clearing operations which led to the killing of two militants and injury of several security force members\(^{(1540)}\). In March 2018, more security operations were conducted in several districts of Zabul\(^{(1541)}\), including one in the district of Shah-e Safa where the Afghan police claimed to have killed 14 Taliban and injured 20 more\(^{(1542)}\).

2.34.2 Recent security trends and impact on the civilian population

General

Overall, in 2017, UNAMA recorded 333 civilian casualties in Zabul (107 deaths, and 226 injured), primarily from ground engagements, non-suicide IEDs and unexploded ordnances and landmines (1543). Over the course of 2017, UNAMA documented an increase in civilian casualties in 12 provinces, including Zabul, which saw a 3% increase over 2016 (1544). Zabul’s minor increase in civilian casualties was due to ground engagements during 2017 (1545). IEDs were the second-highest tactic used in the province in 2017 (1546). Zabul was also among the 10 provinces with the highest incidence of explosive war remnants causing civilian casualties (1547).

UNOCHA maps Afghanistan’s ‘conflict severity’ in 2017 by a combination of three indicators: security incidents, civilian casualties, and conflict-induced displacement. For Zabul, UNOCHA places the district of Shahjoy in the highest category of severity, followed by Arghandab, the second highest. Six districts had mid-level conflict severity: Shomulzay, Nawbahar, Shinkay, Qalat, Tarank Wa Jaldak, and Daychopan. The three remaining districts have a low-mid level of conflict: Atghar, Mian, and Kakar districts (1548). According to UNODC, the main opium-cultivating districts of Zabul were Tarank Wa Jaldak and Mianz, where security was described as ‘poor’; overall cultivation in 2017 reportedly increased by 56% since 2016 (1549).

In the period from 1 January 2017 to 31 March 2018, 90 incidents related to insurgents in Zabul province were found in open media sources by the Global Incidents Map website (1550).

Several clashes and security operations resulted in casualties:

On 21 September 2017, 5 police officers were killed and two were wounded when their check post on the outskirts of Shahjoy district centre was assaulted (1551). In other clashes and attacks on security check posts, six security force members and eight Taliban were killed in Arghandab district on 30 October 2017 (1552). An IED explosion in Kharan area of Qalat resulted in the killing of two policemen and the injury of another, also in October 2017 (1553).

UNAMA reported that in November 2017 Afghan security forces mistakenly killed a civilian in Mianz district of Zabul after firing in the direction where Taliban shooting was coming from (1554).

Pajhwok reported that government forces killed three militants in Shahjoy in clashes at the end of December 2017 (1555). Also in December, six insurgents in Shamulzay district were killed when an IED they were building exploded (1556).

In February 2018, a convoy carrying the head of the Zabul provincial council was attacked by militants outside Qalat, which led to an exchange of gunfire (1557). On 17 February 2018, a police check post in Mullah Din area of the capital, Qalat, was attacked and five policemen were killed (1558). An ANSF vehicle also hit a roadside bomb in Arghandab district. Two bodyguards were injured while the deputy police chief escaped unhurt (1559).

On 22 February, two civilians were killed, including one woman, and one was injured by a roadside bomb in Zabul (1560).

In March 2018, Associated Press and several Afghan media sources quoted local government officials who stated a (retired) Pakistani army general and his bodyguard were killed in Shahjoy district. He was supposedly killed by explosives attached to his motorbike (1561). Another report stated that it was unclear who was behind the attack, while no statement was issued from Pakistan’s military media (1562).

Impact of the conflict on law and order and services

According to UNOCHA, there were four security incidents in Zabul during December 2017 that affected health facilities or health workers (1563). Numerous schools had to be closed in 2017 due, among other things, to insurgent activities (1564).

In February 2018, Province Governor Khiyal Mohammad Hussaini initiated investigations on the count of corruption against a politician in the province (1565). He also called upon the citizens to rely on local jirgas instead of the courts, as people allegedly preferred the decisions of a local jirga over judgments handed down by a court (1566).

Like in the whole southern part of the country, opium cultivation also increased in Zabul in 2017 (increase of 768 hectares or 56 % from 2016); no poppy fields were eradicated in 2017 (1567).

Displacement
UNOCHA collected data, for the period 1 January 2017 – 26 March 2018, on 9 640 persons displaced from Zabul (476 from Daychopan; 261 from Mizan; 168 from Qalat; 7 426 from Shahjoy; 1 309 from Shomulzay) (1568).

UNOCHA reported that during the week from 25 September to 1 October 2017, over 2 500 people were displaced from Shahjoy district villages into the district centre due to ‘ongoing conflict’ (1569).

UNOCHA reported providing humanitarian aid to 800 IDPs in Qalat during October 2017 (1570); however, in early November, aid operations were briefly suspended because of ‘government interference’ (1571).
